BECAUSE OF YOUR KINDNESS WE MADE MIRACLES HAPPEN...
WE ARE SO GRATEFUL FOR YOUR CARING.

"If We Can Save But One Child, We Can Save The World"
JAY LOCKETT SEARS

OUR MISSION OF KINDNESS has cared for over 600 homeless children in local shelters and motels over the past six years

FOR THE CHILDREN who were hungry, we gave them food.

FOR THE CHILDREN who were cold, we gave them warm clothes.

FOR OVER 40 FAMILIES who were able, we found them homes so they could be together.

FOR THE ONES WHO HAD NO VOICES, we spoke out for them, fighting for their right.

FOR ONE HOMELESS STUDENT, Louis Daniels, who persevered and earned a 4-year scholarship to Yale, we feel very proud.

FOR MANY WHO WERE IN DESPAIR, we gave them love and hope and showed them that someone really did care.

BECAUSE OF YOUR GIFTS AND SUPPORT, we were able to save lives, and bring hope and love to so many.

PLEASE HELP THE LESS FORTUNATE CHILDREN OF OUR COMMUNITIES.

SHELTER ISLAND... WHAT IF....

Sunset Highway

What if the Dutch had Built New Amsterdam on Shelter Island?

By Dan Rattiner

I was driving toward New York City late in the afternoon the other day and there was the sun in front of me, setting directly over the Sunrise Highway. And it occurred to me that if things had been a little different with the history of this place as it relates to the Dutch, I would not be driving down the Sunrise Highway, but the Sunset Highway.

It's a long story. And if you want to join me on a little journey thinking outside the box, read on.

The first white person to lay eyes on eastern Long Island was a Dutchman named Adrian Block. He sailed by and, standing on the deck of his ship, drew a rough sketch of the two forks of eastern Long Island and the sheltered island in between, and then he sailed on.

I am sure that you know that what is now New York City was originally called New Amsterdam because it was built by the Dutch. And then the English took it over and renamed it.

What you probably don't know is that while the English, French, Spanish and Portuguese settlements were all official colonies of the governments of those places, the one called New Amsterdam was not. Holland is a small country and even back then it didn't have much of an army or navy. What was powerful in that country at the time, however, was big business. The businessmen of Holland, particularly those involved in import and export, on their own formed a company to create settlements around the globe. It was called the Dutch East Indies Corporation, and its board of directors met once a month in Amsterdam to count their profits and decide on any pressing matters at their holdings in Indonesia, India or Africa.

men or money, and the businessmen would say — how many fur pelts did you bring in this month and how can we hold costs down — and so that's how it was.

One time, Governor Peter Stuyvesant returned to Holland to say that some of the English colonists from Connecticut were setting up towns pretty close to New Amsterdam and soldiers were occasionally coming into New Amsterdam for a pint of ale or two.

Perhaps they ought to hire a security service or some soldiers or something. The businessmen said — how much — and they turned him down. In the seminal event of the history of New York, the English simply packed some of their ships with soldiers, paraded them in a vast fleet up and down the East River demanding that Stuyvesant give up his fort. And Stuyvesant did. Not a drop of blood was shed.

What I'm wondering, however, is what might have happened if these businessmen had looked at Adrian Block's map and said — the place to build a fort would be this island between this North and South Fork. It's protected and sheltered. And we could have lookouts on the beaches of the North and South Fork to keep us alert to any approaching enemy — Indian, English, French or other-

"Give me your tired, your poor, your hungry," the sign would say. "The Montauk Lighthouse shines for all."

They had, for example, paid for Adrian Block to go out and have a look at the coastline of North America. And eventually, after he reported back and showed them his map, the company approved putting a colony of men and women on what is now Manhattan Island. It would be the main Dutch trading post in the New World. And a governor would be hired to run it. He'd come back periodically to say he needed more

An Albuquerque lawsuit claims a young Mescalero Apache girl's hair was cut by a stylist during the filming of East Hampton resident Steven Spielberg's TV miniseries, "Into the West." The suit filed in U.S. District Court claimed that the stylist cropped the hair of then 8-year-old Christina Ponce to make her look like an American Indian boy for her role. Mescalero Apache tradition forbids the cutting of hair before a girl's Coming of Age ceremony.

BREAKING NEWS

Press Conference

The deal between LIU and Stony Brook has been accepted. The official signing on the dotted line will take place at a press conference on Friday, March 24 at 9:30 a.m. at Chancellor's Hall on the campus of Southampton College. All are invited to attend.

Canoe Place Changes

The Canoe Place Inn, the legendary nightclub in Hampton Bays, will likely be bulldozed. Mitchell and Gregg Rechler of the real estate firm R Squared LLC have filed plans to build a "private residence club" with 75 two and three bedroom units on the property. The club will likely remain open while the developers seek the necessary approvals to re-develop the property. The development is expected to take two years and cost over $100 million.

The old nightclub was once a speakeasy, attracting gangsters, starlets and politicians. It was constructed in the 1700s by Jeremiah Culver. Southampton Town Supervisor Patrick Heaney was reported saying that the new project would create good tax revenue for the area. He also noted the historic importance of the building, although almost none of what stands now is the original construction.

Splish Splash Sold

Splish Splash, the water park in Riverhead, is going to change hands for the second time in the past seven years. MidOcean Partners will acquire Palace Entertainment, the current owners of the park. The sale is said to be around $200 million and should go through later this month. MidOcean has high hopes for the 96-acre water park and plans to add to it, beginning with a new ride called Alien Invasion, which will become the 19th attraction.

So let's suppose that they did. Here is how I think matters would stand today. I think New Amsterdam, the fort, would have thrived on Shelter Island. But then the English, from their towns in Connecticut, would have paraded their fleet and caused Governor Stuyvesant to give the place up, just as he had done on Manhattan Island. And then, I think, New Amsterdam would change its name to The City of the East End, and the place would grow into the biggest and most important city in the world. The acreage on Shelter Island is just about the same as that on Manhattan Island, after all.

What a splendid skyline this city would present today to those sailing in from Europe. Ships would mark their entry into the city at the big lighthouse at Montauk Point. "Give me your tired, your poor, your hungry," the sign at the base of the Lighthouse would say. "The Montauk Lighthouse shines for all."

Ship passengers, heading into the sheltered bay on the north side of the South Fork would see on their right the great International Airport built on Gardiner's Island, named for the first Englishman to settle near New Amsterdam. This island, entirely paved, would have on it four passenger terminals, three parking garages, and half a dozen runways, including three that were built on landfill to extend 10,000 feet out from the shore, and able to accommodate the new Jumbo Jets that can carry 800 passengers. They'd see the big Robert David Lion Gardiner Bridge that extends as a causeway between Gardiner's Island and the Borough of Amagansett, which a hundred years ago got incorporated into the City of the East End as its eighth borough. They'd pass the freighter port at Fort Pond Bay in Montauk, filled with tankers and container vessels. They'd sail under the Gardiner Bridge and see all the other bridges that connect the Borough of East Hampton and the Port of Sag Harbor to what is acknowledged as the center of the world — Shelter Island, the largest collection of ninety-story skyscrapers anywhere, housing the center of finance, fashion, television and film, advertising and publishing, capped by the 121 story Trump Lighthouse Tower behind the forty story United Nations secretariat building designed by Edward Durell Stone sitting waterfront facing Sag Harbor. Diplomats from almost 200 countries come to Shelter Island to solve, or try to solve, the thorny political questions of the world, either at the United Nations, or with the President of the United States at his rooftop penthouse "Circle Room" apartment at the top of the Trump Lighthouse Tower. Sailing on further to the North, past bridges, linking Shelter Island to the Port of Greenport, the passengers enjoy the view of the world famous Greenport Waterfront Merry Go Round. We won't talk about the run down series of tenement buildings going out to the east, which is the red light hotel district of Orient. But we will talk about what is in the opposite direction, about Yankee Stadium in Riverhead City, home to the East End Ospreys, perennial winners of baseball's World Series year after year, or further to the west, the sort of run down Thadeus William McCormick Ballpark, named after a long-ago Superintendent of Highways, which is home today to the East End Mets baseball team and in the autumn, the East End Jets football team.

There'd be no Fifth Avenue, no 42nd Street, no Seventh Avenue on Shelter Island. This central borough of the City of the East End, this island shaped like a Rorschach inkblot, would

After 25 Years, the Boys Harbor Fireworks May be No More

By Dan Rattiner

For many people, summer in the Hamptons is framed by five major events. These events are the Fourth of July parade in Southampton, the Fourth of July Fireworks on the beach in East Hampton, the Bastille Day/Boy's Harbor Fireworks in Three Mile Harbor, the Hospital Benefit in Southampton in August, and the Hamptons Classic Horse Show in Bridgehampton over Labor Day.

There are other major events. There is the Artist-Writers Game, Polo in Bridgehampton, the Hamptons Music Festival, the Writer's Conference, the Have a Heart Gala and I might even mention the Dan's Papers Potatohampton Race on Memorial Day weekend. But the first five loom pretty much head and shoulders over any others you could name. Now the five might be reduced to four.

The Boy's Harbor Fireworks in Three Mile Harbor takes place on a Saturday night after the second week in July, but only occasionally on Bastille Day itself, which is July 14. Around three in the afternoon, at various waterfront locations around the Harbor, people begin to assemble in their cars and set up for tailgate parties. Lawn chairs, blankets and barbecues are arrayed out on the arc of Sammy's Beach in Northwest, along Three

Mile Harbor Drive also in Northwest, along the Inlet Beach in Maidstone Park, down at the end of Gann Road and Will Curl Highway, and out on the grass at Town Marina Park on Three Mile Harbor Road in Three Mile Harbor. Others assemble by the thousands in private homes surrounding the harbor. Telescopes are set up out on decks. Buffets get arranged. Meanwhile at the half dozen marinas at various other places in the harbor, sails that will begin at 9:30 p.m., five hours later. As the sun goes down, the parties begin and dusk settles in, and lights turn on everywhere around the harbor. Out on the anchored yachts, which by this time number a thousand, the harbor appears as a floating city of boats. And then, as darkness settles down over everything, without warning, the thunderous roar of the first firework announces the start of this event, and as the shimmering lights of it slowly settle over everything, the echo of that roar comes back. For the next hour, out in the harbor, smoke, fire, roars and explosions mix with cheers, drink and food and dominate all conversation.

The creation of the annual Bastille Day Fireworks, which have just completed a twenty five year run and which may be no more, came about because of a confluence of three extraordinary people in the Hamptons.

They are Anthony Drexel Duke, the late George Plimpton and the late Felix Grucci.

Tony Duke, a member of the prominent Duke family, owned, and as this is written still owns the largest undeveloped parcel of waterfront property in East Hampton Township. He bought it in 1937, when he was 19 years old. And on this property, he developed a summer are raised and engines are started up.

By four o'clock, some of the boats begin to slowly venture out. They are not heading out to sea. They are heading out to the center of Three Mile Harbor near the Water Ski Area, where a barge has been anchored. By five, several hundred boats are already anchored in a semi-circle around the barge. All of this is in anticipation of the great fireworks display camp for underprivileged children which for many years was called Boys Harbor, and in more recent years was called Boys and Girls Harbor. During the summer time, every two weeks a new group of campers, mostly grade school age from New York City, would arrive at Boys Harbor to replace the previous group. They would be out there one hundred at a time, and over the years literally tens of thousands of city children got to experience swimming, hiking, volleyball, tennis and other group activities that might not have been ordinarily available to them. There is today an alumni association of these children, now grown up. Many of them have contributed to this camp, either as counselors or advisors or financial supporters. All of this was made possible by Tony Duke, who presided over the camp for all these years. Count the years. This is extraordinary.

But Tony Duke could not do this alone, and in addition to the support he received from the campers and alumni, he also reached out to other people of means for financial contributions. One of those he met in this regard was George Plimpton, the raconteur, author and editor of the Paris Review.

By 1976, George Plimpton was already a well-known public figure in New York City, not only for his literary achievements but because of his hobby, which was setting off fireworks. I recall that in the spring of that year he attempted to set off the largest fireworks in history from the Quogue dump. It was created for him by the Grucci Fireworks Company, which was, and still is, perhaps the most famous fireworks company in the world. (They had again won, that year, the Gold Medal at the Fireworks Competition in Monte Carlo.) It blew up on the launching pad, rattling windows for miles around.

Two years earlier, the Mayor of New York had given George Plimpton the title of New York City Fireworks Commissioner. It was a ceremonial post. But it was indicative of the delight taken in him by the general public. In 1976, therefore, he oversaw the most elaborate fireworks display in the world, the display assembled over the Statue of Liberty by the Gruccis to celebrate this nation's Bicentennial. It went on for over an hour.

The next year, George Plimpton and Felix Grucci Sr. got together and organized a fundraiser for the camp at Boys Harbor that consisted of a fireworks display on the beach in front of the Plimpton home at Town Line Road in Wainscott. Hundreds of invited guests attended. And after two years there, the display was moved to Three Mile Harbor, the body of water over which the camp looked. And so the tradition of the Bastille Day Fireworks, held two weeks after the Fourth of July fireworks so as not to compete with it, and named for Bastille Day just for the hell of it, began.

The party at the camp, overlooking one thousand boats, is surely the most remarkable party of the summer. And if there are a thousand boats in the harbor and perhaps five thousand people at parties in homes in the surrounding area — ask the police department, which has to handle the traffic — there are a thousand people on the grounds of the camp. There is nothing exclusive about it. You buy a ticket and you are in.

On the camp grounds, there are all sorts of places to set out blankets to watch the fireworks. Around the Duke home, which is on the property, there are about 200 people invited to a private party. And as with the others in glades and lawns nearby, there is good food served, but there are also clowns and magicians and other performers to entertain. And

$6 Billion

We Bought LILCO for $6 Billion, Now Somebody is Selling It?

By Dan Rattiner

There is something eerily familiar about the deal brewing between KeySpan and National Grid to sell the electrical factories on Long Island that provide us with our electrical power. The seller is KeySpan. The buyer is National Grid. And the amount of the sale is to be $6 billion.

Twenty years ago, after a huge number of protests and marches and even sit-ins where thousands of people sat at the gates of a nuclear plant at Shoreham under construction and refused to move until the police hauled them off, Governor Cuomo ordered that nuclear plant to be abandoned just as it was completed. A huge sum of money had been expended by the old Long Island Lighting Company (LILCO), in building this nuclear power plant. Now there would be no income. So, in the end, the Governor announced that to save this company's butt, this huge sum would be paid by the taxpayers of the State of New York and given to the owners of LILCO, after which LILCO would go away. And that's what was done. The amount given to the owners of LILCO was $6 billion.

What an interesting coincidence.

If LILCO had screwed up and had built what was supposed to be a half billion-dollar nuclear power plant for $6 billion and then got themselves bailed out, the State of New York, meaning us taxpayers, got a power company.

My question is, why is some private company called KeySpan being paid this $6 billion for our power company? Didn't we twenty years ago reach into our pockets and PAY $6 billion for this thing? So if we own it, why are WE not getting the $6 billion?

The answer to this question has not been

Neither of them were to be called LILCO. LILCO, as a name, was absolutely hated for building this monstrosity, for building it ineptly and for building it at overbudget by tenfold. Also, since Long Island could not properly be evacuated in a nuclear emergency, they should never have built it here anyway. Everybody knew all that, too.

Thus after six months of LILCO bills, there came the break into two parts. One part, which would own the power plants, would be called KeySpan and would be a private company owned by private individuals. KeySpan would have the job of providing the power to a government agency, a semi-independent agency, which they would call LIPA or Long Island Power Authority. LIPA would send you your monthly bill. Embedded in it would be the cost of the energy sold to them by KeySpan. If you drove down past any former LILCO office anywhere on Long Island in the last twenty years, you would have noticed that there were TWO signs on the wall. LIPA and KeySpan. Both companies ran out of the same office.

So now KeySpan is being sold. All its power plants, privately owned again, will be bought up by National Grid, a company with head-fully explained to me by anybody. I'm told it's complicated. And I've been told how this is complicated and so now I am going to tell it to you.

When LILCO folded its tent and walked away, the State took over the company and simply continued to run it as it was, so you still got your power from LILCO. But then they decided to break LILCO up into two parts.

consist of a melee of tightly packed and crooked main thoroughfares, with pedestrians, noisy buses, taxi cabs, chauffeur-driven limousines and tourist trolleys going every which way. The scene, particularly at night, would appear as a busy interplay of brightly lit arteries meandering through the tall buildings.

The business district of the city, on the north shore of the Island, would consist of more big skyscrapers on the bluffs overlooking Deering Harbor, where a hundred ferry boats shuttle passengers back and forth between the island and The Port of Greenport, departing at 5 minute intervals. (On the south coast, a similar fleet of ferries shuttles between the waterfront entertainment district of the Island and the Long Wharves at the center of Sag Harbor.)

All people who come to the City of the East End marvel at the fantastic interplay between water and land with — at night — the sentinel of Trump Lighthouse Tower turning and shining its beacon in a slow, comforting, continuous circle overhead. The City is often compared to Hong Kong or Sydney or even San Francisco and is referred to in tourist brochures as "the City of Bridges." Other districts include the exclusive residential district of North Haven, accessible only by helicopter from the Business District. There is the Flanders Navy Yard and Submarine Base just southeast of Riverhead, Celebrity City — a city within a city in the very center of Shelter Island where the likes of Alec Baldwin, Renée Zellweger, Woody Allen, Steven Spielberg and hundreds of others live around Movie Studio Park. There is the high-tech Silicon Harbor in Amagansett, and, on the tip of the North Fork at Orient, bending around, the isolated and terrifying community of Red Hook, the home of crime, extortion, drugs and gang warfare. Warning: do not go there. Nor to the high security Animal Disease Center occupying Plum Island, just offshore of Orient.

But the trademark for this city is really its bridges, of which there are more than two dozen connecting everything to everything. What a sight. The longest — and the longest in the world — is the 17 mile long Robert Moses Causeway connecting the Port of Greenport to the City of New London with its natural gas facility on a man-made island halfway. The longest single span bridge is the one connecting Shelter Island with the Borough of Southampton at Noyack. A curving piece of land on the Southampton side, originally known as Jessup's Neck, provides a landing place for this beautiful bridge, which brings you to what is said to be the most diversified borough in the world. In Southampton, you'll hear Portuguese, Japanese, Korean, Spanish, Vietnamese, Indian, Chinese and Burmese spoken.

And from Southampton, one can visit the posh suburbs of Hampton Bays, the blue collar working-family community of Quogue, the vast section of what was once called the Pine Barrens — and now College Town, the home of four major universities, and in Remsenberg, the Shinnecock Indian Gambling Palace. You can also stop into one of the terminals at the second major airport of the City of the East End, the one just north of Westhampton Beach, known as the Theodore Roosevelt International Airport, after the most famous President of America who came from New York State.

Of course, if you want some peace and quiet, you can visit that 25,000-acre national park to the west, a vast array of hills, valleys and grassland where two pristine rivers come together, the East and the Hudson. Here you will see wild foxes, snakes, beavers, piping plovers, leopards, jaguars and pigeons in their natural setting. The masterpiece in the center of it all, accessible only for hikers and guides on alternate Wednesdays, is the Manhattan Game Preserve.

And just think — it's all available just a two-hour drive west down the Sunset Highway. •

Adventures in Writing #6: The LIRR Train Wreck in Calverton

By Dan Rattiner

During the wintertime, one of my favorite places to go to write stories for this paper is the café in the sculpture garden at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It opens at noon for lunch, but before that, from the time that the Museum opens at 9:30 a.m., and for the next two hours, it serves as an informal coffee house where they serve fresh pastries and cappuccino. I sit there at one of the round tables facing out onto Central Park and I write on this laptop until they start to put the linen napkins and tablecloths out. The waiters know me. They signal the end of my session with the clank of silver salt and pepper shakers on my table to indicate that the linen is about to come. This is around eleven thirty. It's a fine writing session.

The other morning, I found it impossible to get over there for the morning session, but I would be able to get there in the afternoon. I called the museum.

"What happens after lunch?" I asked, hoping that at two it was over.

It goes all afternoon, came the reply. "But there's another place you could sit," the information woman said. "It's the Café in the American Wing. It also overlooks the park. And from 11 on, you could sit at a table there for as long as you want."

I got there about one in the afternoon. It is a grand place, with thirty-foot ceilings, round little café tables just like they have in the sculpture garden and wall to wall windows overlooking the park. Every table was full, though. And people were sitting at them having lunch off cafeteria trays. It was lunch time, after all. There was a long cafeteria line at one end.

As I stood there, however, holding my shoulder bag and laptop, three people got up from a

I was chugging along typing for about twenty minutes, with my research notes strewn about, and writing about the largest train wreck that ever happened on the East End, when a woman of about forty came over holding a tray of food. She stood across from me.

"Mind if I sit here?" she asked.

I motioned to one of the chairs. It would be fine with me.

"I have another person with me," she said.

I thought — yeah, they're surely going to be yakking away while they eat, and so I said the following. "If you don't mind, I'm writing. As you can see. So if you would keep any conversation to a minimum."

What could I say? She glared at me. Then she glared at my computer.

"This is an extremely inappropriate behavior," she said.

Her friend came over, an older woman carrying her own tray. It was immediately apparent that this was her mother. Mother looked at me and then at the daughter standing there, and then she sat down and prepared to start eating. I said nothing. And tried to get back to my writing. I was right at the part where No. 422 is barreling down the tracks past Ronkonkoma at 70 miles an hour.

Daughter just stood there, glaring at me, and table by a window. Nobody else was waiting ahead of me. So I went over and sat down. I could surely work here. As I took off my coat, however, I thought briefly I might go to the cafeteria line to get some coffee. I dearly wanted coffee. But then I thought if I get up, somebody might come along and grab the table. Even with my coat there. So I guessed I better start just typing.

then the mother said this: “

“Darling, I think I forgot to get some orange juice. Could you go back and get it for me?”

This interrupted my train of thought. There was a new thought. Coffee. I turned to the younger woman who was just setting down her tray to head off to get mother the orange juice.

“I wondered,” I said to the daughter “if you could get me some coffee too if you were going over there. I’d give you the four dollars. Decaf Cappuccino. Small.” I took out my wallet.

“You want me to get YOU coffee?” she said. “I’m not your servant. And I am not going to put up with your anger. I can’t believe this. Mother, we’re going.” And she picked up her tray. Her mother now stood up and picked up her tray, then stared at her daughter. Are we really going? Yes, we are really going. And off they went.

About twenty minutes later, someone asked if they could borrow one of my two empty chairs and I said sure. Fifteen minutes after that, I got to the point where the railroad train leaves the tracks and goes down the wrong siding right into the middle of the pickle factory. It was a good time to pause and take stock. And I really, really needed a cup of coffee now.

I turned around and asked the people who borrowed the chair if they could look after my hat and coat and not let anybody sit there and they said sure. And so I picked up my computer – I wasn’t about to leave my computer there – and I walked through the crowd toward the cafeteria line. As I went, I looked, out of the corner of my eye, for the nasty lady and her mother. If they were there, they would see me and think a-hah, he’s finally getting his. But, through the crowds I didn’t see them.

then the fireworks begin.

George Plimpton himself would narrate the fireworks display over a microphone. Each of the first ten fireworks would get fired off one at a time, at one-minute intervals as a kind of introduction to what would come next. He would describe what fantastic new display each firework would present — most of these first ten absolutely original — and he would mention the name of someone who he would dedicate it to — a supporter of Boys Harbor. Then, there would be the nearly one hour of continuous display set to music. It might begin with the William Tell Overture, then segue into something from the ballet Swan Lake, then move on to the theme of the Broadway show Oklahoma. And the fireworks would change — in color, intensity, design and speed to work with the music. It had actually been choreographed.

At ten thirty p.m., the fireworks finale would take place, after which there would be complete silence for maybe twenty seconds. Then a mighty cheer and honking of horns would commence, which would last for five or ten continuous minutes, to thank George Plimpton, Tony Duke and the Gruccis for this remarkable entertainment. Then everybody would go home, either by pulling up anchor or walking by flashlight back to their cars. And that would be that. What an event.

Felix Grucci Sr. died peacefully in 1993, ten years after a huge fireworks explosion at his factory headquarters in Mastic, Long Island killed two of his family members. His sons, led by Felix Grucci Jr., have carried on the tradition, still providing the fireworks for the Boys Harbor Fireworks and remaining the foremost fireworks makers in America.

George Plimpton died in 2003, and hundreds attended a huge memorial for him at Cipriani’s in Manhattan a month after his passing.

Tony Duke has carried on. And the events at the Fireworks have been narrated for the past two years by James Lipton, the TV personality.

But none have been planned for this year. Last autumn, Tony Duke announced that he would be ending the summer camp and he

Mystery Solved

A Door Here, a Stairs There, Some Drainpipes in Hampton Bays

By David Lion Rattiner

There have been some very suspicious crimes that have happened in the past two weeks. As the writer for the police blotter of this newspaper, I have been paying a lot of attention to all of the different crimes that go on in the Hamptons. Generally I'll hear about DWI arrests, car accidents and domestic disputes. Sometimes I'll find out about teenagers vandalizing mailboxes and occasionally there will be a break in. Surprisingly, about ninety percent of the time I read about a break in, the person that reported the break in cannot find anything missing. Maybe the criminal just wanted to walk around.

But two weeks ago, an interesting crime occurred. A large mahogany door was taken from a resident's house on Halsey Lane in Bridgehampton. The door was valued at $3,000. Besides the door, nothing else was taken from the home. You don't hear about a door being stolen too often and you almost never hear about a door costing someone $3,000, but sure enough, it happened in Bridgehampton.

Nobody really raised an eyebrow when this happened. Big deal, a door was stolen, who cares? Maybe a guy just really liked the guy's door and wanted it for his house. The thief certainly can't put the door out front for his main entrance. How awkward would it be for the Halsey Lane guy to show up at an acquaintance's house for a summer cocktail party and notice that the front door of the home looked familiar?

The missing $3,000 door has not turned up yet, but they are still looking for it and hopefully they will find it.

But last week a robbery occurred that really raised MY eyebrow. A beach house in Springs was robbed, not of the contents on the inside of the home, but of parts of the home itself. Kathy Anderson of Springs reported that her mahogany staircase was stolen from her home.

IN SAG HARBOR — TO BE OR NOT TO BE

By Grant MacMurray

What should be the use of the John Jermain Memorial Library building in Sag Harbor? This was one of the questions on the table last week when the Community Library Committee, after a mere eight month deliberation, voted to move its location to a new building on a prospective site next to Mashashimuet Park on the Bridgehampton-Sag Harbor turnpike. The committee recommended to the library board that the current building be retained and used for community services and programs, as well as continuing to house some library materials. The vote of 10-1 in favor of the recommendation was proof to some of a sweeping mandate for the two building model, with some stalwarts holding a staunch opposing stance.

The committee formed last May, after a proposal to build a 16,000-square-foot building on a lot next to that very same park at a cost of $8.5 million was voted down after a public referendum. The committee was brought together in order to gauge and mollify public opinion as to just what the best method of solving the library's space dilemma might be. The issue is something of a sticky wicket in a town with as many historical sites and buildings as Sag Harbor.

Four members of the committee were absent from the meeting. One absence, that of Gail Slevin of the John Jermain Future Fund, a group formed specifically to fight the move, might be viewed as an indictment or protest against moving the library from its current traditional location. Nevertheless, a decided majority believed that the move, as well as the construction of a new building, were not only necessary, but overdue. The sole opposing vote was cast by Priscilla Ciccariello who did not believe that the two-building approach was in

The staircase was located on the outside of the home and led from a door to her house down to the beach.

She also reported drainpipes and other copper-coated parts of the house's drainage system stolen. The staircase was valued at about $5,000 and the drainage system and copper pipes total a value of $15,000 in total. It will cost her about $10,000 to have the staircase replaced. Whoever did this should be shot.

Who the hell steals a staircase and a drainage system? I can understand jewelry, money, television sets, but staircases? I started to connect some dots.

It wasn't until three days ago when I got wind of a robbery in Hampton Bays where all of the copper piping of a home had been stolen. It is pretty obvious to me what is happening here. A house is being built.

Sooner or later, we are going to hear about a mahogany roof being stolen from a residence. Then we are going to hear about a swimming pool being stolen. I have a feeling that week by week another piece of a building will get stolen until somebody will have built an entire home out of stolen property. Maybe next week it will be a $4,000 toilet seat. You just never know.

If the crook that thinks he can build his home out of stolen materials from other homes get away with it then he has another thing coming. We are onto him and when a home gets built with a familiar looking mahogany staircase leading out to the beach, questions will be asked.

Whoever is building this home out of stolen property must desperately want a dream house in the Hamptons but can't afford the materials. When it does get built, however, he'll have another home to go to, behind bars.

the best interests of the community. The one careful abstention was that of Alexandra Eames, who expressed concern over the cost of the project.

The majority of those in favor of construction on the new proposed site were against the initial recommendation at the beginning of the reconsideration. But now, upon thinking of it again for eight months, they had come around. The only feasible solution was felt to be the two-building approach that most had virulently opposed earlier. Some committee representatives, during the discussions, were quick to offer the olive branch for the disruptive and controversial relocation from the historic site donated by Margaret Sage in 1909 and named for her grandfather, Major Jermain. It was a decision, according to Mr. James Marquardt, that the committee had, "wrestled with for quite some time." Mr. Marquardt did not feel, however, that the library could operate smoothly as a house divided; and, ever the populist, recommended a further referendum to see just what the best public use of the old building might be.

Allison Gray, the director of the Jermain Memorial Library, has received suggestions that the old building operate as a village visitor's center, a John Steinbeck archive, or historic exhibit dedicated to the history of both Sag Harbor and Eastern Long Island in general. It has also been suggested that the building be used as a public meeting space in which to hold public referendums. The house currently adorning the library owned acre-and-a-half property adjacent to the park is of no historical import and would most likely be torn down in order to make room for the new building.

The committee will make its formal recommendation in the coming month. So there will most likely be time for many "visions and revisions, before the taking of toast and tea" in a cozy new library building. Provided of course that a referendum for a tea room on the new site is proposed and accepted. We all pray that it will be.

Simpson Boulders

The Town Begins to Take Action About the Blocked Beach Access

By Christian McLean.

The debate over the rights on the 2.7-acre parcel of land sitting at the end of the Surfside Drive cul de sac in Bridgehampton has been going on for a while now, six years to be exact. Initially the property was part of the Sagg Pond Estates subdivision and was restricted to members of that community. In 1987, due to a non-payment of taxes, it was acquired by Suffolk County. The property was then handed over to the Town of Southampton.

If you've been following the saga over the past few weeks you've surely heard that Robert Simpson, the property's adjacent neighbor on the south side, has stationed eight boulders across the property, barring vehicles from passing through a narrow sand drive toward the beach. Placed along the cul de sac are seven signs that read NO PARKING; a sign at the entrance to the sandy drive which reads NO VEHICLES BEYOND THIS POINT; and still another sign, on the north side of the drive which reads ACCESS RESTRICTED TO RESIDENTS OF SURFSIDE DRIVE, SANDPIPER LANE, MEADOWLARK LANE, AND PHEASANT WALK ONLY. NO TRESPASSING.

But who put these signs up? They seem professional enough, white with bold black letters, almost like the town may have done it, but there's still some debate about it. According to Southampton Town Attorney Garrett Swenson they are looking into the origin of the signs, all the signs. From what he has said, it seems the NO TRESPASSING sign should be removed immediately. Once the property was taken from the County and given to the Town it became as much a public place as the beaches that surround the area. Although Mr. Simpson's claim and Judge J.J. Jones Jr.'s verdict state that the deed attached to the property demands that it remain as recreational use for the development's residents, thus preventing pedestrian and vehicle access across the property, the Town's interpretation of the deed is that, while it may guarantee the development's residents use of the property, it does not restrict the use erty may very well be on his property, which gives him the right to place the boulders at its entrance. If the survey reveals that the road is part of the Town-owned property, then it gives them the authority to seek approval for the removal of the blockade. But what happens if the Town and Simpson share the road? Well, if the boulders are any indication as to the severity of Simpson's resolve, the boulders will stay put. But that's for the courts to decide, and so far they've sided with Simpson.

But what about the signs? If it is decided that the signs were placed illegally, then they can be removed, opening the cul de sac for parking and giving the general public access to the Town's land.

As last week's article in Dan's Papers stated, the beach is public property, so anyone currently looking to enjoy the 2.7 acres of public land next to Mr. Simpson's home would now have to park their car at the end of Ocean Road and walk east along the beach, cutting north just before they reach Sagg Pond. We recommend everyone does this until the boulders and/or signs are removed in order to show Mr. Simpson that he may take our roads but he will never take our freedom. Bring Frisbees, fishing poles, picnic baskets, and of course, a radio. It'll be like what they did with Manuel Noriega down in Panama, when the armed forces blasted Guns 'n' Roses at the Vatican embassy in an attempt to rattle the general. Welcome to the Hamptons, we've got fun and games. . .

If the survey reveals that the road is part of the Town-owned property, then it gives them the authority to remove of the blockade.

of it by the general public. Hence making the NO VEHICLES and NO TRESPASSING signs null and void.

As of Friday a professional survey was being performed in order to decide exactly how the Town will proceed. The survey will once and for all (theoretically) delineate what land is owned by whom. In other words, the sand drive that looks as if it is off to the side of Simpson's prop-would be arranging for the saving of the camp grounds as a nature preserve. He continues to work in his headquarters in Manhattan at 1 East 104th Street in the wintertime, where classes, guidance, recreation and day care are offered to the city's disadvantaged kids, there and at half a dozen other locations in Manhattan.

At the present time, the 200-acre property on the harbor is in the process of being sold. The Town of East Hampton is interested in the purchase, as is Suffolk County. And there are no plans for fireworks.

It is almost April. There is still time to arrange for the continuation of this astonishing fireworks display in the Harbor. And there is precedent for it. The harbor itself is under the jurisdiction of the Town of East Hampton. For a number of years, the Town, with funds arranged by the Montauk Chamber of Commerce, held Fourth of July fireworks in the center of Lake Montauk. It can be done. We hope it will be.

Maybe we just have to get the officials of East Hampton interested in the French Revolution.

I mentioned at the start of this article that the Bastille Day Fireworks is my own personal favorite of the major events of the summer.

In fact, although I bought my present home on the east side of Three Mile Harbor because I loved to watch the sun set over the boats, the arrival of the Bastille Day (Boys Harbor) Fireworks almost coincided with my moving in.

I bought the house in 1977, the year after the huge fireworks celebration in Manhattan. Three years later, the fireworks display made its debut in the Harbor.

I had a boat at the time, a little rowboat with an engine on the back, anchored at the shore by my house. That first year, I took the boat out that night and parked it right near the barge and enjoyed the evening, quite a dramatic evening, with fireworks ash raining down on me, from that vantage point. With me were a girl friend, a bottle of champagne and some cheese and crackers. We came home very slowly through the crowd of boats after it was over, guided by the beam of a flashlight we had with us.

Ever since, I have attended the fireworks, either on the Boys Harbor Grounds, out in the water (my favorite), or at home. Sometimes, I would go over by boat early, dock at the Duke's to congratulate them and have some champagne and burgers, then go back out onto the boat and watch the display from the water. One year, I was married in my front yard at 9 p.m. on the evening of the fireworks. The display capped the event.

It is a fairytale experience to go out in a boat at night. It is a fairytale of mythic proportions to go out and anchor among 1000 boats and attend an hour-long fireworks display such as this with friends. I hope they work things out.

Jodi Foster, who is usually very reclusive, made an appearance at last Monday's Elle Decor's Dining By Design Benefit to see her old Yale buddy Marco Pasanella's table. The designer is also rumored to be the father of her eight-year-old son. While the shy star refused to be photographed at first, Patrick McMullan, East Hampton's persistent and charming photographer, finally persuaded her to pose.

HBO producer Tom Kelly, an award-winning novelist (The Rackets and Payback), who was featured recently in the NY Times Sunday Book Review with his new book Empire Rising, got engaged last weekend at Gurney's Inn. The honeymoon is already planned at Gurney's this fall. Tom Kelly will also appear on Ingrid Lemme's "American Dream" show this spring.

Jamie Johnson, East Hampton resident and creator of HBO documentary Born Rich, is currently working on a second film. This independent production focuses on the distribution of wealth in America.

Who's Here

By Dan Rattiner

Scientists have wondered for years about the influences on human development. Do genes account for the differences? Or is it the environment? The debates have raged back and forth.

Last week, I interviewed Josh Bernstein, a man who was born and raised in privileged circumstance on the Upper East Side of Manhattan. He went to Horace Mann. He went to Cornell. In the summers, in his early years, he came out with his parents to their home in Sagaponack.

"I learned how to ride a bike in Sagaponack," Josh told me. "I remember tying a crab to a fishing line and dropping it over the Sagg Bridge to fish for alewives."

He has a twin brother, who today wears a tie and jacket, and lives and works in Los Angeles running a business-to-business service called Mentalyoga.com. You could look it up on the Internet. This twin brother is fully integrated into urban society. And he remains Josh's best friend.

As for Josh, he has turned out a little different. Today, he is the host of the most successful program ever produced on the History Channel. It is called "Digging for the Truth" and Josh travels to Egypt, the Canary Islands, Somalia and Greenland poking around in archeological sites, going on adventures, looking to solve mysteries. I watched him on one episode carrying heavy stones up the sides of the mounds that exist today from the former American Indian pyramids along the Mississippi River. I've watched him throw spears from a horse-drawn chariot charging through a field on the site of the ruined city of Troy. He's a long way from Manhattan. And in fact in real life, he lives in Boulder, Utah, in a Mongolian Yurt.

"It's round, like a circus tent, it has a canvas exterior. It's really well made. But it is a semi-permanent structure as far as the building department is concerned. But it's legal."

Well, if he doesn't quite live there, he calls it home and keeps his stuff there and lives there sometimes. Mostly he is out on the trail, where he sleeps out of doors in the wild, with no tent, sleeping bag or backpack. He likes it.

"What if it rains?" I asked.

"I'll hang a poncho in a tree and sleep under it."

It's always been like this for Josh Bernstein.

Josh Bernstein Explorer

He grew up in a prep school environment, and his twin brother stayed with it. He did not.

"My parents tell me that I began poking around when I was six months old. My brother was playing with his toys. I was crawling over into dark corners looking for things."

I'm not afraid of death. I remember one time being a bit uneasy that a large animal might fall out of a tree on me.

"Like what?"

"Who knows? Truth, maybe."

Josh's father was an Israeli who owned a successful insurance business in New York City. He married an American woman who today has a successful career as a literary agent. But then, in the lap of luxury, they were curious. And so the family frequently took exotic vacations in foreign lands around the world. It was great for everyone, especially the twins. And really especially for Josh.

"I just always liked to be out of doors," Josh told me. "I never wanted to be in an office. We'd go to summer camp, I went to Camp Winauke, and I loved it. I was good at sailing, and kayaking. I was a good rifle shot. Sometimes I went with my parents and I'd have the best time chopping wood. I was the best at erecting a tent. I don't know. It just came naturally to me."

How come not to his twin brother?

"I can't explain it," Josh said. "I went to Horace Mann through High School and there were lots of outdoor activities, and I was very good at it. Rebel? I remember I knew I didn't want to be just another rich kid who gets driven to school in a Mercedes and becomes a lawyer." Josh paused. "I couldn't pretend to be poor. But, I thought, I could still get my hands dirty and break a sweat. I'd study cultures, do archaeology, be an environmentalist, enjoy the outdoors."

Josh's dad died when he was 15. That summer, Josh went off to work on a ranch in Wyoming. He built log cabins. He rode horses. The following summer, he went to a survival camp called the Boulder Outdoor Survival School, which he read about in Backpacker Magazine.

"I saw a movie. Clint Eastwood became my role model. In survival school we'd go out onto the trails in Idaho or in Indian country and sleep on the trails. No sleeping bags, flashlights, toilet paper, matches. When we needed a fire, we'd rub sticks together. There are actually four different ways to rub things together to make a fire."

Josh explained them to me.

We talked for a while about the whole business of exploring, about what it means to be an explorer. He mentioned several explorers who had city lives in addition to lives in the wild.

"Roy Chapman Andrews was one," he said. "So was Shackleton. It only depends on your passion for each, whether you prefer one or the other."

Josh Bernstein is 35, movie star handsome, and at the time I was interviewing him, which was in an apartment in New York City, he was dressed in a suit and tie. It was 7 p.m. He would soon leave to attend an event at the

Museum of Natural History. Today, all these years later, he has explored much of the remotest parts of the planet, he has lived in the wilds of Africa, he has climbed the highest peaks in South America, he has been to the Pole. Yet here he was in a suit and tie.

"Are you ever afraid of anything?" I asked.

Josh thought about it for a moment. "No," he said. "Not of the dark, or of heights or insects or anything like that. I'm not afraid of death. I remember one time being a bit uneasy that a large animal might fall out of a tree on me. I remember that."

I persisted. I wasn't even wearing a suit and tie. "THIS?" he said. "I'm promoting the series on the History Channel. I don't mind dressing this way. Not at all. And I still come to the Hamptons. When I'm here I'm comfortable with it. (Pause.) I mean I grew up here. But my real home is in Idaho. Or out on the trail."

While at Cornell, Josh continued to take two week long courses in Utah at BOSS in survival. They'd go down to Mexico or up into Canada. During the rest of the summers, he worked in Sagaponack in construction. In his third summer at Cornell, he worked for builder Guy Burfield, doing renovations.

"He did the major work, the stud walls and the roof and so forth. I did minor repairs. I stripped wood, stained decks, repaired stairs."

Josh also qualified to be an instructor at BOSS. In his final summer at Cornell, he worked half the vacation in Sagaponack and half the vacation as an instructor at BOSS. In 1990, he graduated from Cornell with a degree in Anthropology and Psychology. Then he took a year off and went to Israel where he studied at the Pardes Institute, a yeshiva where young men prepare for the rabbinate. There he studied ancient texts.

"Eventually, I came back," he said. "I went back out to Utah where I talked to Dave Wescott, the owner of BOSS and asked if I could be a Marketing Director for the firm. He said show me a marketing plan. I can't pay you, but if it increases the business, I will give you some of the profit from it."

Thus was launched Josh Bernstein's full time year around career in the outdoors.

"What did you do?" I asked.

"Well, at the time there were 8 instructors and 15 courses. We had a brochure printed on newsprint. Nobody knew about us. I put ads in outdoor magazines and, when they were effective, doubled them in size. I went to trade shows. I made us a glossy brochure. I wanted us to do corporate courses so I made speeches at big businesses. I wanted to expand the business to become an international business."

"Did it work?"

"I doubled the business in one year, then in the second year I doubled it again. By this time we had 45 courses. And it was just bigger than Dave thought he could handle. He offered to sell the business to me. I told him let's just swap roles. I'll pay you and become the owner and be the CEO. You be in charge of the courses. So that's what we did. I paid him a lot. He said this was a dream for him."

One of the people Bernstein met in the course of his giving talks in big corporations promoting BOSS was the writer Bill Broyles. Broyles soon called saying that he'd received a call from the actor Tom Hanks, and Hanks wanted to make a movie about survival. What would it be like if a FedEx man were stranded on a tropical island? He wanted Broyles to write the screenplay. Maybe Broyles could get some training in survival techniques to see what it was all about. Broyles knew Bernstein. Could Bernstein teach him? Broyles took the two-week course.

"One thing led to another," Bernstein told me. "Charlie's Angels was sent to me. We trained them in survival for the movie. Then we got calls for survival work from NBC, CBS and ABC. We've sort of become the place to go to learn survival skills. And then I got this letter. It was a form letter."

The letter came from a producer at the History Channel. They were planning to produce a show and were looking for someone to be in it who was young, adventurous and well traveled. Did we know anybody? Did we have anybody we could recommend? They'd apparently sent this letter out to many people. By this time, Bernstein had hired an agent. "The agent said this looks like it would be good for you. Give it a shot. And so I went."

The History Channel, like all media companies, does not explain much about the shows they are auditioning you for. They don't want

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

I hate to admit it, but I love rocking out to rap music. I just think that it is so cool. Eminem is the man, 50-Cent is totally the man and Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg are gods as far as I am concerned. Occasionally, I'll throw an old Eminem CD into my stereo at my house and just blast it really loud. I get pumped up listening to rap music, sometimes I start doing pushups, other times I rap along with the lyrics that I know by heart. I know most of them and have been told on numerous occasions that I need to stop rapping along. Of course, I'll never stop rapping along.

Rap and hip-hop are two music genres that have swept the globe. It is no longer for hoodlums and gangsters (although this is what is mostly rapped about) like it was when it first started. Today and for almost a decade it has become mainstream, with millions of records sold.

Unlike rock and roll, soft rock, heavy metal or country, rap has a characteristic to it that I think is going to make things look sort of funny forty or so years from now. That characteristic is the way people dance to it, which is known as the grind.

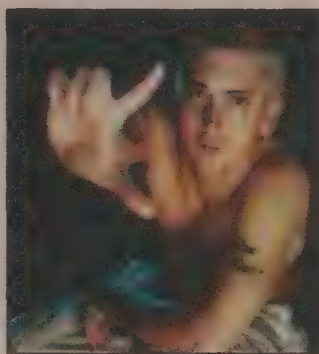

The grind is a unique dance for two reasons. The first thing that makes it unique is the fact that you get incredibly close to your partner, particularly in the lower regions of your body and then you basically move with your hips to the beat (at least this is how I have interpreted the dance). The second thing that makes this dance so unique is the fact that it is probably the most erotic dance out there. The grind in comparison to say, the waltz for example, is much more R rated.

What is going to happen forty years from now when it comes to the grind? I was looking down at the CD case for Eminem's, "The Marshall Mathers LP," and I realized that this record came out in 2000. This means that the record is six years old and I still listen to it. I truly believe that it is a timeless album. This is not a Back Street Boys record. This is a Rolling Stones, Billy Joel and Sublime record. This is a record that is going to be selling forty years from today.

I have seen my grandparents, and my parents, for that matter, dance on occasion and they never do the grind. I think it is because they either do not know about it, think it looks ridiculous or simply never did it when they were younger and do not want to have to go through the torture of learning how to do a new dance. My Dad, for example, is very good at dancing to rock and roll. He'll do things like dipping or he'll spin his partner around his arm. But you won't catch him grinding and it would be weird if he did.

What does the future hold for grinding? I'm not so sure. Will I one day be sixty at a high school reunion with a bunch of other sixty-year-olds listening to hip-hop and grinding away? It is a strange thought, but not very far fetched.

I saw Mick Jagger on television during the half time show at the Super Bowl and he was shaking his hips like there was no tomorrow. You could easily spot people in their sixties throwing their arms in the air and moving to the beat. It looks good, I think, the arm in the air head bob is a timeless move, the Mick Jagger hip sway is a little strange, but hey, it's Mick Jagger. The man can do whatever the heck he wants.

I keep expecting to see a new form of dancing take shape any day now, but the grind appears to be here to stay. I'm not complaining, I'm just saying that I keep expecting it to change. I feel like we went from waltzing, to square dancing, to swinging, to foxtrotting, to rock and roll jumping, to head banging, to break dancing and now finally we are grinding. But each one of the aforementioned dance moves lasted about a decade and then fell out of mainstream pop culture. But the grind has been here since 1987 (we all saw Dirty Dancing).

You can't really go much further than the grind, at least on the dance floor anyway. I doubt that the next generation of dance moves is going to involve anything more R-rated, but you never know. Maybe one day the next thing to do will be the shirtless grind. Now that would be an interesting forty-year high school reunion.

the competition to find out about anything. So Bernstein went, and the producer of the show took a look at his resume and said she didn't think he'd work out for her show, but there was ANOTHER show they were looking for a HOST for.

"That one you'd be perfect for," she said.

And so Josh Bernstein was interviewed by producer Peggy Kim, who is Program Director of the History Channel and the executive producer for this show they were putting together to be called "Digging for the Truth."

"And she hired me almost immediately," Josh said.

He could continue to run the Boulder Outdoor Survival School, but they'd pull him out of there to take him away on shoots every once in a while. They were producing 16 shows, 26 if the first 16 were successful. That was two years ago. The show is wildly successful. They are wrapping up the second year — they have seven more episodes to do, and are in contract to do a third. Everybody loves Josh Bernstein. Tomorrow he is a guest on Martha Stewart's cooking show.

"What's your favorite episode?" I asked.

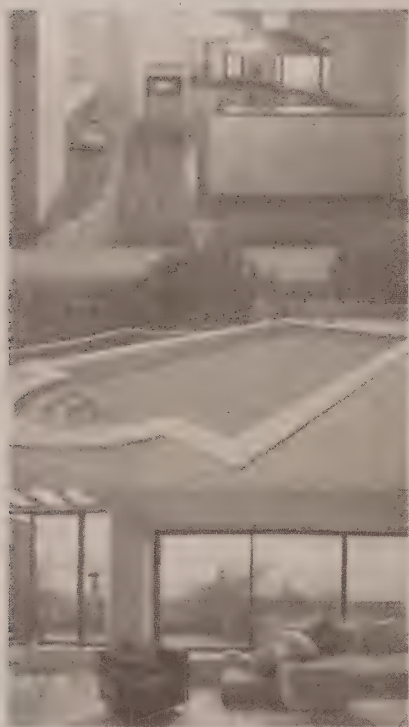

"They're ALL my favorites," Josh said. "They're like my children."

"Well, then pick one."

"Pick a favorite child? I can tell you my favorite digging site is Petra in Jordan, my favorite archeological site is Egypt, my favorite food is in Italy, but my favorite meal is in Greenland. Does that help?"

"What did you eat in Greenland?" I asked. •

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #391 BE PREPARED!

AP: Mon., March 20, 2006 SYDNEY, Australia — The worst storm to hit Australia in decades, Cyclone Larry - a category five storm ... mowing down sugar and banana crops and leaving thousands of people homeless ... the airport was cleared to house thousands of people in tents. ... Snakes and Crocodiles Alerts... volunteers to help with the cleanup were warned to be on their guard for deadly animals stirred up by the storm, AP reports. "Keep your kids away from flooded drains, be aware of snakes and crocodiles.....Those guys will have had a bad night too."

A Hurricane, a Typhoon and Cyclone are all the same kind of storm, just in different locations; hurricanes in the Atlantic, typhoons in the Pacific and cyclones in the southern hemisphere for Australia. Australia, of course, has to be different, so their storms spin clockwise. They reverse their seasons, drive on the wrong side of the road, speak English with the thickest accent they could possibly develop, they just go out of their way to be different from the rest of the world. We have normal names for our hurricanes; Alice, Louise, Nathan; they have stupid names for their storms; Larry, Dick, Bud....BUD? YES! They had Cyclone Bud! It was only a category two, so they called it - what else? Bud-lite!

Many Australians visit Shelter Island in the summer. I ran into a big clutch of them last August at Wades Beach. They were talking loud, but I hardly understood a word. I was worried because they were drinking (yes, it's true) and I was sure somebody was going to drive on the wrong side of the road. So I stayed and monitored them for as long as I could. They lured me to their picnic with a plate of shrimp. I only ate the shrimp to be polite and to give me an excuse to get in close and find out what they might be up to. They were planning a trip to Las Vegas and trying to determine what 'territory' it was in. I told them it was in Indian territory, so they'd better be armed. A couple of the men were wearing Calvary style straw hats with one side up, so I told them they could lead the charge since they already had the hats. Someone said something to which there was much laughter. If I had had my Australian to English Dictionary with me, I've have gotten the joke. What I did discover, when they threw their heads back to laugh, is that there are no orthodontists in Australia, so if anyone wants to corner a market, I think there's one waiting in the outback.

We got into a conversation about deer and they asked me what predators we had here for population control. I said just guns and cars. They were very excited that there was hunting on the Island and I suddenly realized I'd said the wrong thing. So if anyone on the Island thinks they had a dream last August of Australians hunting among their hydrangeas, I apologize. They advised me that one wolf pack could take control of our deer population. I promised to pass that along to our Town Board. I'm sure Wolf Pack Importation would go over really good on the agenda.

I pointed out that wolves present their own danger and might eat children. No one seemed alarmed. One man said, "Maybe a few." Like that was an acceptable loss. But now I know how stupid I was to discuss dangerous predators with people who just advised the Cyclone Larry victims keep the kids away from flooded drains because of angry snakes and crocs. Are they kidding?

"What 'appened to yer little boy Johnny, Mavis?"

"Ow, lost 'im to croc after Larry, we did. 'e was standin' too close to a flooded ditch and I yells out to 'im, "Johnny, watch for crocs!" But 'e didn't 'ear me."

"I'm sorry, Mavis."

"Well, we 'ave 'is twin. So it's just like 'e's 'ere, except I don't have to buy in doubles no more. So it all worked out in the end you might say."

"Well, all's well that ends well, cheerio!"

I don't know if it's all the sun, something in the kangaroo meat, the isolation from the rest of the world, or what, but Australians have a very different comprehension of 'normal' compared to the rest of the world. Just be prepared in case you need to fend them off this summer... I found the best thing is to tell them that beer in the Hamptons is half the price of Shelter Island's, since ours is all imported...

quarters in the United Kingdom. And the result of this is that LIPA, which sends us our bills, will now be buying the power from National Grid rather than KeySpan. Also KeySpan will receive $6 billion in the transaction.

Richard Kessel, who is the commissioner of LIPA for the State of New York has said that the customers on Long Island who pay for the power ought to be getting some benefit of this sale. He can't control the sale directly and make that happen. But it is necessary for LIPA to buy power from somebody. Could be New England Light and Power that sells it to them, but I doubt it. He says the new owner, National Grid, should give LIPA customers a piece of the $6 billion.

A piece? I thought this was ours to sell.

And now, last week, it's been announced that many of these power plants being sold are miserably out of date and there will have to be an expenditure of about $1 billion more to modernize them. Guess who KeySpan and National Grid are expecting to pay for this in elevated electric rates.

Killer Robots Invading Southold?

The Southold Robotics Team Gears Up With Their Robot "Falcon" For A National Competition

By R.B. Stuart

Well, the Southold Robotics Team, also known as RICE (respect, impulse control, compassion and equity for all), is at it again. This is their fifth year to enter the FIRST (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology) Robotics Competition founded, by Dean Kamen in 1989. Kamen, the inventor of the Insulin pump, Segway Scooter and an elevated wheelchair, wanted "to transform culture, making science, math, engineering, and technology as cool for kids as sports are today."

FIRST, a non-profit organization, has a yearly robotics competition in which teams of high school students, sponsored and assisted by local companies and volunteers, design, assemble, and test a robot capable of performing a specified task. The success of FIRST is the work of over 25,000 volunteer mentors from engineers to teachers and parents working long hours with students across the country. Last year alone FIRST programs engaged over 70,000 young people. And it was just that that inspired a Southold school student, who five years ago brought an idea to the attention of Tony Kryl, his technology teacher.

Unknowingly, Kryl had been interested in FIRST for years, but because of its costliness and need of nationwide sponsors, never had organized a team before. Without a solid base of students or a network, he couldn't justify it to such a small school system as Southold. Kryl, who's been a teacher for 25 years, has taught engineering, electronics and robotics at Southold High School for 10 years. "Probably since the 9th grade I've always been interested in building things. People have always said that I could build a Cadillac out of a pile of junk. And this is something I've wanted to do for a long time," Kryl admitted.

The Southold School RICE team consists of two teachers, eighteen students from grades eight through twelve, and eight to nine highly involved parents. The majority is boys, but there's been one girl on the team since its beginning. "It's tough to get a lot of girls interested. The girl we have is more meticulous and will question more than the boys do," says Kryl.

Without sponsors, the annual costs of the project are $20,000 to $30,000. The entry fee alone is $6,000 and the parts for the robot are $3,000. FIRST releases on the web what the game will be. They then send the participants a kit of metal parts without directions and they have only six weeks to incorporate the parts into a robot.

During the six-week period of intense after-school work for six to nine hours a day, six days a week, the kids create, design and build it in a team effort. None of it would be possible without the mentoring of local engineers from RJN Engineering, coupled with the sponsorship of Miller Environmental Group, Sea Tow International and Festo Corp., a German based company with Hauppauge offices.

The robot they have built is named Generation Five. The students also like to call it The Falcon, and hope it will be better than last year's robot, named The Tank. Last year they won the Long Island title because The Tank was the only robot to have a turret system, enabling it to stand up without toppling over like many others.

Team RICE will be competing against 36 schools across Long Island and the Northeast. Even though they are one of the smaller teams, they have been big winners since the very beginning. Year one they earned the title of "Rookie All Stars." Year two they were the Long Island regional champions, the following year they came in 3rd place. Last year they won the championship. The school's family of robots is growing by the year.

With the incredible success from the start, they are no longer looked upon as the new kids on the block. Team RICE is surely a force to be reckoned with, and all eyes will be on their Falcon this weekend in Uniondale at Hofstra University, where the competition will be held.

Kryl said he can definitely see some engineers emerging out of this experience. The program offers scholarships, but only to kids who are part of the Robotics teams. "Your affiliation with FIRST carries a lot of weight, especially with technical schools," he commented.

"This year we'll show that we have very unique designs and are hoping to get a design award on top of the other trophies and medals we've won," he exclaimed. "Besides the trophies you get the prestige, learn what it means to work with others, and meet and assist other teams. The robot is the product. It's the working as a team and inspiring the kids to possibly apply what they've learned into a career they'll enjoy," Kryl ended.

As far as a robot invasion is concerned, the school is still far from creating an army of robot soldiers. But you never know.

North Fork Identity Crisis

Northforker Has Trouble Getting Her Bearings Without The North Fork Bank

By Phyllis Lombardi

I think I know who I am. I look in a mirror and see this familiar face. A friend calls my name and I respond. Everything seems fine, so far.

But oh, now things are different. How will I know where I am? For all my years on this slender prong of land, I've been reminded of my location by North Fork Bank buildings and signs, sometimes even two or three of them, in North Fork towns.

From Riverhead through Mattituck, at the light in Cutchogue, on into Southold and Greenport and even over to Shelter Island. If I were to stray that far from my Cutchogue home, the banks and the signs were there. And I knew where I was, on the North Fork, it says it right there on the bank. As a matter of fact, the Long Island Rail Road trestle in Mattituck boasts a huge North Fork Bank sign. How dare they! But then the sign became a reassuring friend who welcomed me home to the North Fork from a journey perhaps all the way to Nassau!

Mr. John Kanas has changed all this. He's taken away a map, if you will, which pinpointed my position at any given time. The North Fork. Mr. Kanas (North Fork Bank's CEO, and let's just call him John) has personally facilitated the acquisition of North Fork Bancorp by Virginia-based Capital One, a large, make that huge, credit card company. John's payout is reported to be $185 million. John acknowledged, "It looks like a big sum of money on one day." I'd say so too, John. Even for a lifetime of days.

But this isn't about money. It's about the North Fork. The bank's new name, due on signs in 2007, will be Capital One. Where's the sense of place in that? What will happen to the descriptive Twin Forks designation? No twins now. It's the South Fork and Capital One. John, what did you do to us?

Guess I'll have to identify the North Fork in ways unrelated to banks. Let's see.

It's the North Fork when everyone says hello to me. People older than I, kids on tricycles, even teens mumble "hi" to me. Mail carriers and UPS drivers wave. One school bus driver in particular is especially friendly. He shouts out "How ya doing?" I wonder if the number of strangers who say hello decreases as one travels west? Until, when in Manhattan, not one soul speaks to another. Even eye contact is avoided.

Now let's talk chicken. You know it's the North Fork when, from Riverhead to Orient, your nose knows. Barbequed chicken dinners in church halls and on tournament fields fill the summer air with glorious smells. Sit down on a long bench and dig in. Meet your neighbors or some visitors from Vermont. No matter. We're all hungry.

It's the North Fork if you look up too. Night skies out this way are darker (fewer bright lights) than they are up west. As a result, nights are starry, starry and the gazing is good. This can be verified in a couple of ways. Check with the Custer Institute on Bayview Avenue in Southold. Other star-checking sites abound, I'm sure. But those quiet lanes and lonely-night beaches are for North Forkers younger than I.

You know you are on The North Fork when the truck ahead of you on Main Road, anywhere between Aquebogue and Orient, loses an occasional potato. From the spud-mounds headed to market, one could, on any given day and if daring enough, retrieve sufficient road-fall potatoes to fill a five-pound bag. Now that's a good salad.

Chicken again. This time it's the North Fork when a couple of chickens scratch at the ground in front of Cutchogue's King Kullen. These guys wander over from a farm adjacent to the shopping center. Carts roll to a halt as delighted shoppers pause to pay their respects. Here is life, real life. Not frozen or prepackaged or sealed as it is within supermarket doors.

So it goes. Let me count the ways. Traffic stopped for even the smallest of parades. Farmstand cashboxes left unattended. Breakfasts and dinners and all kinds of fund-raisers for those in difficulty. These things are North Fork.

Fortunately, dear John, it seems the real North Fork can't be bought or sold. And the name on the buildings and signs is inconsequential. I know where I am. It's where the coin of the realm remains a handshake. For now, anyway.

Steady Improvement at Vineyard 48

Late last summer, I got my first taste of Vineyard 48's first new wines, all not-yet-released whites from the 2004 vintage. The best of the lot was a nicely balanced semi-dry Riesling, but the others seemed either taut and un-yielding, or a disjointed.

A little over six months later, I decided to re-taste a few of the whites along with three newly released 2004 reds — and there is reason to keep an eye on Vineyard 48.

The first of the re-tasted whites, Vineyard 48 2004 Sauvignon Blanc ($14) has a lean nose dominated by grapefruit and lemon zest accented by typical grassiness. It is medium bodied with lemony-citrus flavors and just a touch of minerality. Some of the acidity has faded in the half year since I last tasted it, but it's still a pleasant, if simple, dry white.

The Vineyard 48 2004 Chardonnay ($15) is fresh and fruity on the nose, offering pear, peach and faint toasty notes. The palate begins with a luscious cherry, cranberry and leather aromas with cinnamon stick and earth dried leaves. Plummy fruit flavors greet the palate with soft, fine oak and tannins and excellent earthiness. This Bordeaux-style blend of fifty-percent Cabernet Franc, thirty-percent Cabernet Sauvignon and twenty-percent Merlot was my favorite wine of this entire tasting.

While many wineries are just now releasing 2002 Merlots, Vineyard 48 has released its 2004 Reserve Merlot ($35) and its youth is hard to miss. Extremely tightly wound, it takes time to coax anything but the faintest aromas of blueberries and earthy damp soil from the wine. The palate is similarly reserved, but does display refined tannins that are ripe and well incorporated. Right now there are just some dusty, earthy flavors and little fruit. I think this wine warrants tasting again in a year or two.

The house is expensive. Your mortgage shouldn't be.

No one has to tell you about the price of a house today. Just look in the newspapers or the window of your local realtor. While a lot of people negotiate to get a good bargain on their new home, a surprising number still don't receive the best deal on the mortgage needed to buy that home.

At Hudson City Saving Bank, we're out to change that. We've been in the mortgage business for 130 years and matching you with the best possible mortgage is our specialty. Among our features are:

- Competitive Rates and Pricing
- Expedited and Convenient Closing Process

burst of juicy ripe apple and slightly tropical flavors with a little crisp acidity, with obvious oak aging bringing some toasted oak flavors towards the finish. I could do without the oak, but it's not offensive.

Perhaps the most un-balanced wine of my initial tasting was Vineyard 48's 2004 Reserve Chardonnay ($30). But, the wine has definitely developed with a little bottle aging. Satisfying toasted almonds and grilled pineapple have replaced heavy vanilla and oak aromas, and while oak influence is still substantial, it seems softer and creamier on the palate. The pineapples carry over from the nose and are accented by toasted marshmallows and a long, somewhat crisp finish. Six months ago, I thought the thirty-dollar price tag was a little preposterous, but this wine is starting to come around. I think I like this one.

I love the rich and often pretty aromatics that the Cabernet Franc grape can offer, and Vineyard 48's 2004 Cabernet Franc ($28) is no different. Beautiful strawberry, red raspberry and anise aromas waft up out of the glass. Unfortunately, the palate isn't quite as elegant and lovely. The fore palate is aggressive with charred oak and tannins that give way to nice berry flavors and eventually a fine, lengthy finish.

The star of the reds is the Vineyard 48 2004 Vignetta ($25), which is much more approachable and elegant. The nose is complex, mingling tart

North Fork Artist of The Week

James Pritchard, Sculptor and Painter

By R.B. Stuart

James Pritchard began drawing in kindergarten. "In high school I was encouraged and began taking lessons. I received a lot of attention from teachers and other students. I think pretty early on I wanted to do something creative. I wasn't drawn to the military as my father was, nor business in general, which is an unfortunate thing. But I always had ideas about how I wanted things to look. Posters and things like that came fairly easy to me."

Pritchard was born 55 years ago to a small family of two in New Jersey. Since his father was in the Navy, he and his sister were raised across 12 states. Later, young Pritchard would find a love for the sea.

He was one of the first two to graduate with a Fine Arts degree from Charlestown. After college he worked at the Gibbs Art Gallery in Charlestown. Within two years he saved enough money to move to New York City to attend the New York Studio School at the old Whitney Museum in West Village. "It was a non-degree school. After one year I went to the Pratt Institute and earned my MFA. Then I was hired part-time at the Sculpture Reproduction Studio at the Metropolitan Museum of Art where for 17 years I made reproductions that would sell upstairs in the store. I became a senior craftsman and proceeded to work on my own art and continued to show and sell my work," he explained.

By his mid-40s, Pritchard had spent most of his time refurbishing a house that he bought in Southold in 1983. This resulted in him working more at his North Fork studio. Most recently in his work, a Naval influence can be seen. A nautical theme has emerged in the colorful, 26-piece, acrylic on wood alphabet flag series. The flags are representative of a language only known in international maritime. Each flag can mean a word, a distress signal, a letter or can form a word using many flags, which allow boats at sea to communicate to one another.

"With this project I used material that was cast off and recycled into something esthetically pleasing. I enjoy the process of putting the pieces together like a puzzle. Taking the debris of modern life, recreating it and turning it into something beautiful, hopefully," he said with a laugh.

"Sometimes finding the will and time to focus on creating can be a problem. It's also a struggle communicating with people, getting shows and making sales. There's still only a small percentage of the population that is interested and buys original art. It's easy for everyone to love art that's been ordained by museums. But not enough people support the arts by buying the original work of an artist," he commented.

Pritchard derives inspiration from nature, and the constantly changing colors and forms in the environment on the North Fork.

When he was younger he was influenced by the work of his college professor, William Halsey. "His work was terrific and I was in awe at how committed he was. I was also very excited by the work of Robert Rauschenburg, and later Louise Nevelson," he said. Over his 23-year career, Pritchard has exhibited his sculptures and paintings in galleries from New York City, to the North Fork and Germany then back again. But what he wishes is to be more consistent producing work on a more regular basis than now. "I'd be feeling more of a complete sense of accomplishment," he said then adding with a burst of laughter, "Along with having people throw bags of money at my feet."

Pritchard is available for commissions and has had requests for the nautical alphabet to be made into someone's name or initials. His work can be seen by appointment at his studio in Southold. He can be reached at 631-765-5045.

Capturing History In Greenport

The Revolutionary War, WWI, WWII, Whaling and Tough Bars

By Chris Messinger

I consider myself a socially aware person, having had the opportunity to travel and widening my perspective as a result of such fortunate journeys. I decided, however, my ignorance of my own surroundings was unacceptable. I began with Greenport, and what a history-filled gem I found.

As the Dutch explorers, navigators from the European nations, started purchasing lands from the native Indians and settling into what is now Manhattan in the early 17th century, the English quickly followed, but guided their sails towards the eastern portion of the north branch of Long Island, which includes Fisher's and Plum Islands.

It has been long accepted, despite the lack of written verification, that the length from the western boundary now known as Riverhead to the furthest point before reaching the shores of Orient, was established as the township of Southold in the year 1640 by colonists from New Haven, Connecticut, known as the Youngs family. Much debate, even today, surrounds such presumptions of whether the township of Southampton or Southold can hold the title as the first officially established English settlement of Long Island. The majority of the first recorded lands belonged to the same family, on the west side of Stirling Creek.

It was during the times of the Revolutionary War when a wharf was discovered on the west side of the creek. This became a significant discovery because of its capacity to hold large vessels that could be discharged and loaded with cargo for ports in the Americas and the Caribbean. These ports at the time were all vital geographical locations for the strategic movements of the war.

The newly developed port began flourishing with activity, and its obvious relation to the characteristics of the sea and its sailors settled in its roots. The section of land switched names on a number of occasions. Before the Revolutionary War it was Winter Harbor, because of its refusal to freeze over during the harshest of temperatures. After the war it was referred to as Greenhill, until finally, in the year 1838, it was incorporated officially as the village of Greenport.

Like all newly developed communities, regardless of their influences, Greenport gave rise to certain traditions and customs, depending largely on the type of people who inhabited its unique landscape and economic potential. Throughout the early years, the Sterling Street Wharf served as a haven for exotic goods that would enter almost undetected because of its sheltered geographical location. The resulting influx of products and goods that entered through the open harbors gave to the salty air a highly commercial atmosphere. Main Street, which was developed in 1827, crossed through Sterling Street, and the newly discovered wharf on Central Avenue became the hot spots for markets. These markets held shelves of sugar imports, molasses and rum from the West Indies. And more importantly, as a result of the efficiency of the wharves, the village became an instrumental whaling port which consisted of over two dozen whaling ships, which made hundreds of voyages across the vast oceans.

Because of its considerable commerce and its deep-water harbors that accommodated the largest ships known to man, Greenport became fitting for a self-producing boat building industry. Numerous shops and inns were developed with Victorian architecture to accommodate the increasing maritime industry. From the 1800s onward, shipbuilding became its most vital activity, and a large number of famous shipyards were established. One in particular, originally the Smith & Berrian, which later became Smith & Terry, actually still exists, and its present location is the Greenport Yacht and Shipbuilding Company.

For the patriotic, Greenport played a pivotal role in the construction of Navy Vessels, both for World War I and II. Pubs were established and the vibe was one of tough sea travelers during this era. Signs posted outside of bars gave warnings of the brutal attitude that would sometimes present itself, with one in particular reading: "People who can't fight, don't even think about coming in."

Greenport stands much like it once did, but only in its historical sense. It has turned the corner in an attempt to thrive, to flourish, to open its harbors as they once were, but this time to visitors. The mayor of Greenport, Dave Kapell, has spruced the place up in an effort to capitalize on its much lower real estate prices compared with that of The Hamptons, calling attention to people from all walks of life. For such a small and historic place, the number of area attractions is quite large: an antique carousel, blacksmith shops as replicas of the real things, lighthouses, sea-port and railroad museums and even recreational facilities for the youth, who have found it hard to maintain themselves occupied during the cold winter months and have contributed to the sometimes bad reputation Greenport has received due to criminal activity. But the effort continues.

I can speak for what I saw, and what I saw was truly precious. A place frozen in time, while at the same time accommodating those who depend so heavily on the modern trends that make life more comfortable. Walk down Main Street and Front Street, and its few side streets filled with little shops, restaurants, Victorian houses, and smiling faces, all welcoming those to their gem called Greenport. Oh, and by the way, the bar that suggests not entering if you can't fight still exists. I rolled up my sleeves and walked in, had a beer and some peanuts, and walked out, untouched, only overwhelmed with warmth, or perhaps beer.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

Writing about the Student Art Festival each year since its inception at both the Parrish Museum and Guild Hall has had distinct pleasures for this critic. We have seen art programs grow and develop; luckily we have not experienced any program's demise.

And while some art teachers have left, there are still a handful of instructors/artists who have been there from the beginning, contributing significantly to the school curriculum. It's not an easy task, considering that arts-in-education is not a priority; rather, it's math and English that must be addressed. Remember President Bush's mandate: "No Child Left Behind." We don't think he's talking about encouraging that painting skill.

Of course, the arts have always had a tough time, subject to the whims of budgets, national priorities and popular culture. It was a tremendous feat when violin lessons were first introduced into the East Harlem School District, thanks to a feisty substitute teacher (played by Meryl Streep in the film, Music From the Heart). There are other examples of when the arts barely survived, but eventually made a tremendous contribution to the public school curriculum.

lum. (Film and animation during the 1960s are cases in point.)

The fact that the visual arts have survived and even thrived at all in our particular school system is a blessing, regardless of an important adult art scene. Thus, we applaud everyone's efforts in the Student Art Festival by choosing a few wonderful and special examples. But let's face it, all the works are wonderful and special in their own way.

There are new schools joining the exhibition this year, and they make salient contributions, including Sachem East High School (for example, Jennifer LaVolpe's creative "Self Portrait") and Newfield High School (especially Matthew LaValle's "Self-Censored"). Both pieces show an introspection that is rare for young people. Another expressive painting from Sachem High School, "A Song for the Broken Hearted," is as poignant as it is personal.

The matter of personal identity as a theme continues with works by students at East Hampton High School, including Delia Rudolph's "Reflection Identity" and Arielle Kouffman's fragmented and almost surreal ink and acrylic piece.

Photographs from Pierson High School are not necessarily about self-image, but they are equally poignant, particularly a small image featuring a swan by Alex Terando and abstracts by Melissa Vazquez and Jessica Goldstein.

Works by students at Patchogue-Medford High School use papier-maché and cloth to create some interesting designs, such materials bringing a variety to the exhibition. We wish, in fact, that more diverse materials had been employed by some of the other schools.

No matter. Art is alive and well, in our area at least.

The Student Art Festival will be on view at the Parrish Museum until March 26.

HONORING THE ARTIST: JANE MCNICHOL

We sat down to talk with artist Jane McNichol to learn about her art and life; we're intrigued because they seem so different from each other. We soon find out that there is a connection.

Q: First of all, you live in the East Village, yet your paintings are beautiful landscapes, like the one on this week's cover called "Islands, and Light Obscured." It's from a view at Orient Point, so mysterious. Not at all like the grittiness we associate with the East Village. Are you drawn to subjects that give you a break from where you live?

A: Yes, I long for the horizon, but there is none in New York. Although I do live near Tompkins Square Park and can see the trees. I guess if I moved from the City to the country I would paint buildings. (She laughs.)

Q: Did you grow up in Philadelphia where you got a B.A. at Temple University? Is that where you first decided to escape from city life by doing landscapes?

A: No, I actually grew up in the suburbs near Philly, more in a rural area. I was always attracted to clean, clear open spaces, like wetlands and salt marshes, for example, places that combined water and land.

Q: That's true, but there's something more about your vast deep spaces.

A: Yes, they were described as "unadorned landscapes" that strip things away, in the last show I had. The series was called "Natural Introspection."

Q: I perceive that this week's cover has the same connotation of introspection. It's about how you see the forms and lights, but the clouds and sun moving across the sky exert their own meaning or insight. On a different note, how did you first get to the Hamptons?

A: I came out to Southold for a party and spent the night several years ago. But it's only been two years since I've used Orient Point as a subject.

Q: Tell us about your apartment in the East Village and your studio in Williamsburg.

A: It was in the late 1980s, and my husband needed an apartment. A friend gave him his, but the only trouble was, squatters lived in the building although I called them "homesteaders." They had paid for their apartments, but the so-called landlord didn't own the building. So everyone stayed, including us, fixed up their place and we bought the building from the City who wanted to repopulate the East Village. It took several years, of course.

Q: It's a good thing your husband could do plumbing. And you can do dry wall.

A: Yes, Jim can do plumbing, not electricity. Actually, he's an artist who shares my studio in Williamsburg. He also has a fine arts service; he works for galleries and museums all over New York, installing, storing and delivering art works.

Q: You two make a great pair, and I know you offer feedback to each other when you're painting. Sorry, that's not a question.

Dave Evans' MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

V for Vendetta

The Wachowski brothers try to put those terrible Matrix sequels behind them in this highly stylized adaptation of the classic Alan Moore graphic novel. An amazingly sinister view of a dystopic London, with classic character actors from Britain's Stephen Fry to Australia's Hugo Weaving, the film is dark, compelling and topical.

She's the Man

Trying to emulate the success of Ten Things I Hate About You, director Andy Fickman's follow-up to the hilarious Reefer Madness: The Musical takes its twists and turns from Shakespeare's gender-bending proto-romcom Twelfth Night. In spite of strong material and a largely capable cast, this lacks bite and comes off as too twee by half.

Failure To Launch

Trip (Matthew McConaughey) is a successful thirty-something who refuses to fly the nest. Sarah Jessica Parker's Paula is the honey-trap hired by his parents to finally lure him into growing up. Lo and behold, the two fall for one another and so on and so forth. Kathy Bates, as Trip's mother, is simply too good for this dross.

The Hills Have Eyes

It hardly seems necessary to re-make Wes Craven's 1977 classic, but it's a welcome break from saccharine nonsense. The Carter family heads out into the desert and following an ill-advised turn into the wilderness, find themselves stalked by a clan of raging psychopaths. It's no Texas Chainsaw Massacre, but gruesome and diverting all the same.

The Shaggy Dog

In the land where sitcom stars come to die, The Shaggy Dog at least has pedigree. Tim Allen and "Sex and the City's" Kristin Davis star in the story of Dave Douglas, a man who occasionally turns into a large, longhaired dog. Hilarity allegedly ensues. Director Brian Robbins (anyone remember Varsity Blues?) takes the helm for this lazy sham.

16 Blocks

Richard Donner, director of the esteemed Lethal

Weapon tetralogy, takes the helm for this better-than-average buddy movie. Bruce Willis plays Jack Mosley, a world-weary cop assigned to transport a witness to the courthouse. Predictably trouble comes every which way. Willis is his usual charming self, while Mos Def, as the witness, is becoming an actor to really watch.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood 1n The Hamptons

Whew! Finally released after many tiresome months of battering hype, Failure to Launch has prophesized its own doom. It stars "Sex And The City's" Sarah Jessica Parker, and Matthew McConaughey. People magazine named him "Sexiest Man Alive," but some find him unripe. So, what's there to rave about? She's not that ravishing and he's not vintage stuff off the vine. Then, its gotta be a terrific story? Savor this: Matt is a 35-year-old who is most happy to live at home with his mom and dad. They want him out, out, out! They lure Jessica, a professional de-nester to dislodge him. Guess what – she falls for him. Wow!

Perhaps it's like mixing apples and oranges; both stars in this star-driven movie are sex-associated, yet the film is predicated on the leads not having sex. Therefore, expect a lot of sexual innuendo that goes in one nuendo and out the other with the well-greased speed of oily television sitcom writers. The movie purports to be a romantic comedy; however, a chill is as apparent as frost around the nostrils of Matt and Jessica. Reports from the press releases indicated trouble between the two during filming, but this is between you and me and the apples and oranges.

To begin with, Matt, with rippling lips and abs has no problems picking luscious, juicy things off local trees. When his latest conquest leaves his crib, tired of playing with his toys and overhead mobile of ducks and chicks, his parents, a blustery, entertaining Terry Bradshaw and a lost Kathy Bates (not having any scenery to work her jaws on) call in the big gun in rocking a cradle hard enough to get it to fall. However, Jessica goes only so far. Kisses, yes. Sex, no. Slapstick, yes. Matthew gets bitten a lot by odd little critters. We're not talking about the women, but done by itsy-bitsy things like a chipmunk. The gals get courted and later allowed to find out that little Peter Pan only loves his parents' happy home. His two close pals do the same. What fun!

Good lookin' McConaughey uses the same wiley-smiley ways to manipulate, fold, bend, and mentally mutilate the fairer sex as unfairly as his boat salesmanship, or keeping his mom a slavish maid to his needs. That is, until Jessica plies her own wheedling, cunning tactics. She, for instance, goes overboard for Matt's true love – sailing. She also creates a reason for him to come to aid her faked distress (a dying dog). The curr, Matt, deserves all the lying and cheating getting dealt back to him. He's been bragging about the fabulous sex with purist Jessica and displaying his critter bite marks as heroic scars. Jessica simply keeps jabbing, Matthew keeps swinging wildly, but not with his one time "bevy of beauties." Parker and McConaughey do better at trading punches than doin' kissy-kissy. They're matched better for mixing it up 'cause their mix has no chemistry.

The fur flying when the odd couple are at each other can be quite tart an' snappy, but can get sickie-wickie with the intrusion of one of those icky movie kids stuck in for sweetness. On the very plus side is Zooey Deschanel as Jessica's roommate. She can ZING off sarcastic lines with deadly, but very lively accuracy. Her appearances are acidic enough to cut the awful, thick-as-birthday-cake frosting that ends the entire aborted "Out to Launch" attempt at 1930s screwball comedy.

Sex in the city as well as "Sex And The City" are still very popular. Nevertheless, this film should not be.

Entertainment In Town

review: ring of fire...by gordin & christiano

Ring of Fire, the new Broadway musical based on the songs of the late Johnny Cash, features the talents of six outstanding singers, three men and three women, who delve right into the heart of the music the Man in Black made famous. There are 38 songs in all that evoke the spirit of Mr. Cash including "Hurt," "Country Boy," "A Thing Called Love," "Five Feet High and Rising," "Ring of Fire," "Man in Black," and "I Walk the Line." These are country songs about home, family, hard work, and adversity that reverberate with a simple message of love and compassion, even faith.

The show has been directed and created by Richard Maltby, Jr., who conceived and shaped Ain't Misbehavin', a hit revue of the songs of Fats Waller that won a Tony Award for best musical in 1978. Back then, his idea of crafting a Broadway show around the music of a particular artist with no book or no narration was a novel approach which, today, has become a genre known as the "jukebox musical." Many have followed his lead with varying degrees of success. Think Mama Mia! (ABBA) and Movin' Out (Billy Joel), two well-known hits; the winning All Shook Up (Elvis Presley); and the disasters like Good Vibrations (the Beach Boys) and Lennon (John Lennon).

The captivating musical Jersey Boys, a biography about the Four Seasons, has revitalized the genre, lifting it to a new artistic level. This hit show has an engaging book that chronicles the story of the guys, while seamlessly incorporating the songs they made famous into the plot line.

With Ring of Fire the creators have returned to the roots of the genre, making no attempt to give the evening a traditional book or turn the musical into a biography like the recent film Walk the Line. There is a down to earth theatricality to the songs, however, that tells the story of a poor man from the mid-west, who travels into the world with only his music, struggles to find success, stumbles and falls, and eventually finds faith, love and redemption from his austere origins.

The six central performers, Jeb Brown, Jason Edwards, Tony Award-winner Jarrod Emick, Beth Malone, Cass Morgan, and two time Grammy Award-winner Lari White, appear to make up three couples in their 20s, 40s and 60s. They could easily be the same couple suggestive of Cash and wife, June Carter, at different times of their lives or they could represent three generations of one family. Their stories are told entirely through the songs they sing. While they are mostly country, there's enough rock and even gospel to give the evening a sense of theme.

The lyrics are interpreted so simply that the words have a storytelling force of their own. The sound design by Peter Fitzgerald and Carl Casella has an unadorned clarity that is wonderful, allowing the lyrics to resonate fully. There is a pure quality that is almost poetic. What's missing is the dark essence of Cash. His harsh edginess and coarse voice brought an interesting duality to his music.

Nonetheless, the first act moves along swiftly and the superb singers dance and play guitars engaging-ly, while giving effective performances. The men shuffle about with a macho two-step and the women strike poses of feminine defiance. They are joined on stage by several fine musicians that give winning support. This is all very cute and charming, but Jarrod Emick and his partner, Beth Malone, take center stage with their winning chemistry. Mr. Emick's delivery of the rather corny song "Look At Them Beans" is an amazing accomplishment. He brings the song to life by imbuing it with a truth that actually becomes moving and inspiring.

The second act grows tedious, and the songs with melodies in the four note range begin to all sound alike.

You begin wondering when it will end and looking for Emick, who is less center stage here. The creators have made their point, but the songs keep coming. Now if you love the music of Johnny Cash, you might not mind, and these superlative performers are an added enhancement, but ultimately, the evening is all sunshine and brightness, devoid of any of the darkness associated with Cash, himself.

Ring of Fire opened at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre, 243 West 47th Street, on March 12th, 2006. Tickets are available online at www.telecharge.com or by phone 212-239-6200, or at the Theatre box office.

JUST FOR KIDS

EAST END KID: ARTRAGEOUS

BY EMILY HART
WITH A LITTLE HELP
FROM KATLEAN DE
MONCHY AND DAVID

I always have loved the Artrageous party, for lots of reasons. It is where I met my godmother, Cindy Hsu, who was there covering for CBS and took a liking to me. It is where I met Leah Lane and we had our portraits painted by Linda Mason. Of course I also love it because I get to have fun, especially playing games and winning prizes. This year was no exception. I went right to the games and on my second try won a toy animal. But I kept going and kept winning and Dad kept carrying, until he couldn't carry any more toys. So I went to the petting zoo where the animals were so sweet and into the jumping attraction to get some serious jumping done. Artrageous is an annual event for kids where there is so much to do – live performances, games, face painting, eats, jugglers, celebrities, clowns and, of course, art. It is for the two-part benefit of the Edwin Gould Services for Children and Families. The first part is the carnival and kids work with famous artists creating artwork, and the second part is the Gala Dinner and Art Auction May 24.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Whenever I find myself driving on a weekend morning, I always try to tune in my car radio to NPR. The Tappert Brothers, who broadcast from Cambridge, MA, impart automotive repair advice to those mechanically challenged. The best part of their radio show is that these guys really know auto repair and have a great sense of humor. To the best of my knowledge it's the most popular show on NPR.

I used to give weekly automotive advice on News 12 Long Island television, but every time I tried to inject a little humor, the powers-to-be became angry, never explaining why. Anyway, it's always fun to poke fun at mechanical problems, to lighten the load so to speak. However, the guys from Boston actually interface with the public and answer telephone questions, which is quite different from my past face-the-camera-and-give-advice routine. My TV segments were also always shot on location, considerably more complex and expensive to produce than just sitting behind a microphone in a studio. I have considered doing a call-in automotive radio show like the Tappert brothers. As a fellow broadcaster once said to me, I have a great face for radio!

What I have always found most interesting about the show is how simplistic some of the listening audience's questions are, which makes me realize that most people don't know much about automobiles. It seems that to the average person, an automobile is just another appliance. Their cars are not expected to break, but when they do it's time to call the dealership or repair shop. This bothers me because I believe that one should have a basic knowledge of what makes an automobile run, and how to keep it running. Just a few years ago, many cars came equipped with a spare tire jack and a rudimentary tool kit, just in case something minor went wrong. Today, no car has a tool kit, because unfortunately, if one of today's engineering wonders ceases to run, a car owner will certainly not be able to fix it with a pair of pliers and a screwdriver.

The major potential problem with today's cars is not with the engine and running gear, but with the electronics. That's why many manufacturers are offering unusually long new car warranties that, in many cases, are not bumper to bumper but "powertrain only" warranties. Unfortunately, because most of the problems in today's cars are electrical, and sometimes on-board computer related, one certainly can't expect today's hapless car owner to know what's going on. However, try to understand a little about how your car works. If nothing else, it will help you from getting ripped off by an unscrupulous mechanic.

Of course in the “good ol’ days” whatever was wrong with a car was easy to figure out. If the car overheated, usually steam came billowing out from under the hood. Add water, fix the water pump or tighten the fan belt. If the engine stopped running, you were probably out of gas. At least, not too many years ago, if you opened the hood of your car you could see the engine. Today, it is virtually impossible to see the motor of any car in production. There are enough plumbing and plastic decorative pieces under the hood of most new cars that everything mechanical is hidden from view. My SVT Ford Focus even has a plastic panel over the battery, making a simple chore like checking battery fluid into a project.

In the past it was true that many on-the-road problems could be solved with a screwdriver and pli-plugs. Perhaps the easiest of cars to change plugs were the flathead Fords, where they just sat right up on top of the engine, begging to be replaced. The most difficult were the air-cooled Volkswagen and Porsche motors. With their opposed air cooled cylinders, the spark plugs were hidden deep in the recesses of the engine compartment, and you had to remove them blind, by feel. Impossible, especially the number three cylinder plug in the back left. Forgedabout trying to change a plug if the engine was hot.

Today, no one is asking you to be a mechanic, but try to understand a little about what makes the beastly in your garage tick. At least check the tire pressures once in a while, it will save you gas and might save your life during an emergency maneuver. Oh yeah, change the oil often in the engine, that works. If the five liter monster breaks, take it to the best mechanic you can find. If all else fails, call the Tappert brothers on NPR radio, tell them Bob told you to call and ask them a stupid question.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

It's probably a pretty sad state of affairs, but I'm going to admit to you that with the cold weather and what's been a busy couple of months for me, I've been spending a lot of my free time watching television. I know it's totally unproductive, but sometimes it's nice to curl up in a blanket with my wife and flip channels. Movie channels tend to be my favorite, but sometimes I like the guilty pleasure of a bad sitcom or reality show. I guess it's something most of us do in this day and age. When you next pull yourself up off the couch and decide to go do something, why not go to Manhattan and check out one of the biggest and oldest networks? NBC has given us "Cheers," "The Cosby Show," "Friends," "Seinfeld," "Knight Rider," "Little House on the Prairie," "The Fresh Prince of Bell Air," "Miami Vice," "Columbo," "The Tonight Show" and the ever-enduring, "Saved by the Bell." Where would we be without Zack, A.C. Slater, Screech, Kelly and the rest of the gang? Those of us who are disciples of Mr. Belding and Bayside High will find that a tour of NBC studios in Rockefeller Center is the perfect caper to a great week of TV.

NBC has given their historic tour since 1933. With an NBC page as a guide, visitors will travel into the depths of the peacock network's operations in New York. NBC notes that some of their biggest celebrities, like Ted Koppel, Regis Philbin, Steve Allen, Marcy Carsey, Kate Jackson, Michael Eisner, Dave Garroway, and Willard Scott were at one time, NBC pages. The first part of the tour stops at the NBC History Theater, and teaches guests about NBC's early days of radio. Early sound effect techniques are discussed as well as the transition to television, then a video presentation by Matt Lauer and Katie Couric follows the history of the network, past and present.

The tour then moves on to some of the most known and well-loved studios in television. Studio 3C, 3B, 3K, 6A, and 8H hold the sets for "NBC Nightly News," "Dateline," "NBC Sports," "Late Night with Conan O'Brien" (a masterful show), and "Saturday Night Live" respectively. Next comes the NBC/Sharp HDTV Theater. High-Definition is slowly becoming the new standard for television. If you haven't yet experienced it, you're missing out. Unfortunately, the service isn't incredibly expensive, but the TVs are. This globe-shaped theater with a 16 by 9 foot Sharp hi-def 130-degree screen runs another film using NBC material that brings viewers through the network's past, present, and future in high-definition. It's the final stop of the tour. Studios in use will be omitted from the tour, but usually at least two to three are available for viewing, although they aren't guaranteed. Neither, of course, is running into NBC talent, but nothing is impossible.

Along with the studio tour, there is a tour of Rockefeller Center and what's called the "NBC Experience Store." A Center historian that will take you through the gardens and Art Deco spaces that make up the "city within a city" leads the Rockefeller tour. You'll learn about a big piece of the New York City legacy and the various components like the flags, statues, artwork by Isamu Noguchi, Lee Lawrie, Michio Ihara, and Paul Manship, Radio City Music Hall, and the world-famous skating rink. You'll also visit the outside of the "TODAY Show" studio where the freaks gather on a daily basis to get a brief moment on the godlike box in their home. The Experience Store puts visitors into their favorite shows through blue screen technology. You can find yourself sitting in an interview with Jay Leno or standing in as Conan O'Brien's (still a masterful show) new sidekick. The experience is free, but videotapes of the novel moments must be purchased. You can also take the "Al Roker Weather Challenge" and present the weather to the folks at home. It's not as easy as it looks.

Before you leave, don't forget to visit the NBC shops where you can spend your hard-earned money on sweets, memorabilia, and DVDs of some of the best and cheesiest shows on television. It hasn't made its way into the tour, but for the record, "Deal or No Deal" is the newest addictive show I can't get enough of on this network. Like I said, I've been watching too much TV.

NBC is located at 49th Street between 5th and 6th Avenue. Call (212) 664-7174 for info.

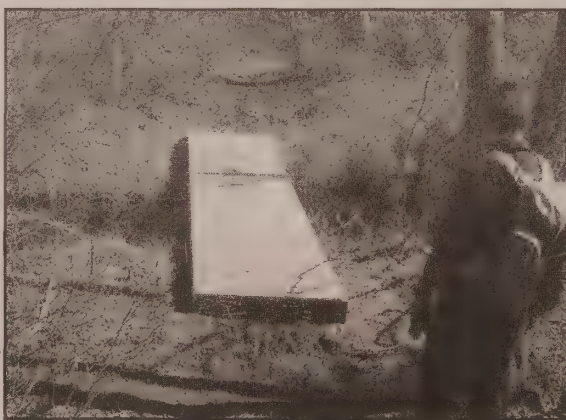

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

A Walk Around Sears Pond

Southampton Trails Preservation Society has trail maintenance outings on Thursdays. I joined the group on a work outing last week and helped to clear a segment of the blue loop trail that circles around both Sears and Bellows Ponds. The white rectangular blazes of the Paumanok Path and the blue blazes of the loop trail run around the southern half of the pond; the blue loop trail continues around the northern half of the pond. The blue loop is well blazed along the trail corridor that it shares with the Paumanok Path, but the northern segment of the loop needs to be reblazed. When my friend George blazed this trail about six years ago, he blazed it in only one direction. He wanted to control the order in which the hiker experienced the trail. This works fine if you intend only to hike the trail in question, but if you wish to use a section of the trail as part of a different hike you may find that you need to walk this trail in the "wrong" direction.

The day following the work outing, my friend Rudi and I decided it would be fun to see if we could walk the trail around Sears Pond. We parked our cars at Spinney Road North. Normally, to get to Sears Pond, I walk the Birch Creek Trail to Owl Pond. This trail was blazed almost 10 years ago and the yellow painted blazes are disappearing, but the trail is well worn. It starts behind the kiosk near the entrance to Spinney Road North and runs north, parallel to Spinney Road. The Birch Creek Trail and Spinney Road both head north to the Paumanok Path. We followed the Paumanok Path east to Sears Pond. Rudi and I were in a hurry to get to Sears Pond, so we walked straight up Spinney Road and then turned left onto the Paumanok Path. Spinney Road is a wide semi-paved road. We saw several trails cross this road before we got to the Paumanok Path. I look forward to coming back and investigating these side trails. We walked Spinney Road for almost a mile and then traveled the Paumanok Path east for half a mile. Here we found the intersection with the Black Owl Loop and George's one-way blue loop. The Black Owl Loop is a 6-mile loop trail that runs through both Sears Bellows Park and Hubbard's Creek Park. The blue loop circles around both Sears and Bellows Pond. We followed this trail only around Sears Pond.

Following the three different colored blazes around the southern half of the pond, we walked on a makeshift boardwalk of miscellaneous pieces of wood. The trail took us onto higher ground and then down some well built steps. Soon we reached an intersection where the blue trail turns left at the Sears Lake sign. We crossed Mill Creek on a new bridge built by County Parks. Now we were walking the portion of trail that the STPS Trail Crew had cut the day before. There were several trails running at angles to the pond; they reach marshy areas and then disappear into the wetlands. We walked these small trails (they afford some lovely views of the water) and each time found our way back to the blue trail. The northeast quadrant of the loop winds away from the pond avoiding some wetlands; then we found the black owl blazes again. We were back to where the Paumanok Path intersects the loop.

This time, instead of taking the Path back to Owl Pond or Spinney Road, we followed the black owl blazes north across CR 24 into Hubbard's Park. At the next major trails intersection north of CR 24, we followed a trail that occasionally branched but generally took us in an eastward direction. We lost the trail before we reached our goal and had to walk through 100 yards of thick catbrier but when we got to the road, we were facing the Spinney Road intersection where our cars were parked.

Spinney Road North trailhead in Flanders is on the south side of CR 24 just east of Birch Creek. There is a paved parking lot with a kiosk. The opening to the trail is on the west side of the Spinney Road parking area, near the kiosk. The road is closed 50 yards south of the intersection; park anywhere along Spinney Road's west side. There's a nice variety of hikes you can take from this trailhead. To contact STPS for more information or if you wish to help with trail maintenance call 631-537-5202.

Ken Kindler is a Trails and Open Space Advocate working to help the trails groups and land managers care for our "Natural Island." If you would like to learn more about our trails or help care for them, visit the Hiking Long Island website. www.hike-li.org.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Friends came to visit me this weekend so I planned a weekend of R&R with a little shopping in between. They left rested and happy with a car loaded with shopping bags full of goodies. Let's do some friendly shopping!

Joanne, Marie and I started out in Hampton Bays for a look at what's new at Bar Boy Products on Montauk Highway where they carry a full line of home bars and all the wild accessories that include stools, ice machines, sinks, glassware, blenders, and mixers, just to name a few. Everyday is a sale day here and if you are looking for something really different for your home and backyard patio, look no further. For information, give them a call at 631-728-7100. Jimmy will be happy to help you get your season going with a bang!

If you are looking for some real great buys on pottery for the spring to spruce up your patio and deck, Waterstone Pottery on Mariner Drive in Southampton is the place to go. The "Inventory Clearance Sale" is offering 30% to 70% off all pottery from last year's stock and the prices for glazed, metal and terracotta are available at below cost until April 21. Get going, fill up those pots and start planting, it's spring!

At the Bridgehampton Commons, Bombay has lots of great new spring merchandise and the sale makes this store a must-stop-shop! The "Spring Sale" will save you 25% off regular priced items through March 27. And Bombay now offers upholstered furniture with beautiful fabrics to choose from. There is also a new selection of furniture and cool new functional accessories including beautiful prints. Bombay is a great source for that special unique gift, and there are always many specials and clearance items throughout the store that will definitely put a smile on your face.

English Country Antiques on North Sea Road in Southampton and Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton are having their "Luxury Linen Sale." They are also gearing up for spring and summer with their Interior Design Department to help you get your home spruced up for the upcoming season with 20% off all fabrics sale.....The sale ends April 2, so get going, spring is finally here!

At Aimee's Closet on Main Street, which I think is a hidden treasure of a shop, is having a 20% to 50% off sale on select merchandise throughout the store. If you are looking for something really different, you will definitely find it here.

Tutte Bene, also on Main Street in Bridgehampton, is having a "Winter Sale" with lots to choose from in ladies' clothing, accessories and shoes. Get going.

Next we were off to East Hampton's Main Street, where we found some great sales happening. First we stopped in Ricky's Urban Groove for a look at what's new in cosmetics and more.....Ricky's is having a "Buy One Get One Free" jewelry sale and is also offering 25% to 50% off on selected items. Some of the fun wigs are on sale for $19.99 if you are craving a quick new look this spring.

Getting ready for their new merchandise to arrive, nearby at Obligato on Main Street, everything is on sale at 70% off girls' clothing. This is a good one!

Tennis East is having a 30% to 50% off sale on men's, women's and children's merchandise...This is a fun store, don't pass it up.

At Bookhampton, also on Main Street, you can pick up your summer reading with the 25% off selected books. Can't wait to sit on the beach,

At Bombay, Bridgehampton

read and relax.

Also on Main Street, Cashmere Hampton's sale will save you 20% to 40% off on select merchandise. Now is the time to stock up on those cashmeres you have been looking for all winter.....

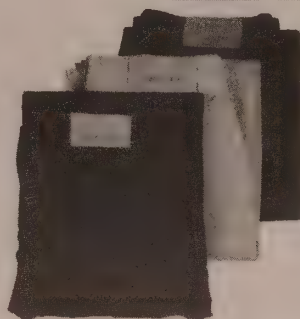

I have to say this was an enjoyable shopping trip for myself and my friends. We stopped for a quick lunch at Bobby Van's on Main Street in Bridgehampton, which added a little punch to our day. The girls went home very happy!

Don't forget about the Fourth Annual Hamptons Restaurant Week's retail shopping discounts with participating East End retail shops. The date: March 26 through April 2. Get eating, get shopping!

Until next week, Ciao and Happy spring shopping!

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, and you would like everyone to know about it, I would love to hear from you via E-mail at: Shoptil@danspapers.com or you can reach me by fax at: 631-537-6755.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The idea of serving small, decorative salads as a first course, is in itself very appealing. There is almost no other category of food that gives the cook more latitude in his or her imagination than salad composition. When preparing a salad it's time to play and there are no rules or boundaries here except when it comes to the freshness of your ingredients.

For a green salad, lettuce comes in an incredible array of shapes and colors and is available throughout the year. Fresh greens tossed in a little olive oil and vinegar, with a bit of salt to heighten flavor, is where you can begin, and this would make a perfectly fine salad. Caesar salad makes a terrific first course and is ubiquitous on just about every restaurant menu for good reason — people love it! It brings to mind the showpiece of tableside service of the 60s when waiters perfected the preparation in a wooden bowl for all to view.

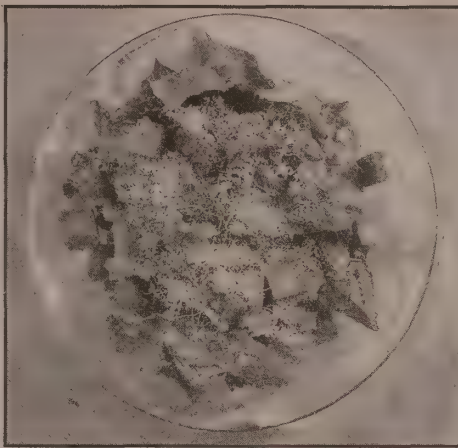

Salads can indeed be playful and one that I've been playing with lately incorporates frisee — a fluffy head of greens with lacy leaves varying in color from pale to dark green at the outer edges — pickled shallots and candied walnuts with a crumbly, rich blue cheese to complete the picture. It's a recipe to entertain and to be entertained. I recommend that you prepare this delectable salad in stages as in the recipe that follows.

CLASSIC CAESAR SALAD

Use only the best of everything, from romaine to croutons to oil and cheese, for this classic.

Serves 4-6

1 fresh head Romaine lettuce
1-2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
4-6 tinned anchovies, drained
1 cup croutons, preferably homemade*
1 3-minute cooked egg
2 tablespoons lemon juice
5-6 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Shaved Parmesan cheese

1. Discard any bruised outer lettuce leaves. Discard heavy white membrane at base of leaves where necessary.

2. Wash lettuce; spin dry in a salad spinner, then carefully roll up in paper towel to absorb excess moisture. If doing ahead place in a ziploc bag and refrigerate for several hours or overnight. Bring greens to room temperature if refrigerated.

3. Place egg in cold water to cover; bring to a simmer and coddle for 3 minutes. Cool under running water and shell over a large salad bowl; egg will be slightly loose. Add finely chopped garlic to the egg in the salad bowl. Add anchovies and mince into the garlic mixture. Add croutons and lemon juice or wine vinegar and stir to mix. Season mixture with salt and pepper to taste, then gradually add olive oil. Dressing can be made an hour or so ahead to this point.

4. Just before serving, tear greens into pieces and place the greens over the dressing. Carefully lift the greens with a folding motion, until leaves are well coated with the dressing. Divide equally onto 4-6 salad plates and shave the Parmesan over the greens. Serve at once.

*Croutons: Cut about 1/3 loaf of crusty French or Italian bread into 1/4-inch cubes. Yield about 1 cup. Toss the cubes in extra-virgin olive oil to coat and bake in a preheated 375 degree oven for 8-10 minutes. Transfer to a waxed-paper dish and let drain. Cool and use in salads. Can be made ahead in larger batches. Put in a paper towel-lined tin and store in a cool dry place. They will keep for weeks.

FRISÉE WITH CABRALES, PICKLED SHALLOTS AND CANDIED WALNUTS

The shallots and walnuts can be prepared ahead and stored in suitable containers. Refrigerate shallots in the pickling brine and use as needed.

Serves 6

For the pickled shallots

6 large shallots, peeled and halved
1 1/3 cup white vinegar
1 teaspoon coriander seeds

1 teaspoon black peppercorns
1 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
4 star anise
2 dried chilies
1 bay leaf

For the candied walnuts

1 cup walnut halves
1/4 cup sugar
2 tablespoons unsalted butter

For the salad

1 bunch frisee, wash and spin-dried
1 1/2 - 2 tablespoons pickling brine
3 - 3 1/2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1/2 pound Cabrales (Spanish blue cheese or other blue cheese)
Pickled shallots and candied walnuts

1. Peel the shallots and cut in half lengthwise. Combine the remaining ingredients for pickling in a saucepan and bring to the edge of a boil. Let simmer about 15 minutes, then pour into a bowl large enough to submerge the shallots. Let cool. Meanwhile place the shallots in a steamer basket and steam for 2-3 minutes. Drain and cool. When pickling brine has come to room temperature add the shallots to marinate in the brine.

2. For the walnuts, spread the halves on a cookie sheet and toast in a preheated 350 degree oven about 5 minutes until toasty. Remove from oven. Place sugar and butter in a skillet and bring to a simmer. Simmer the mixture, stirring occasionally for 3-4 minutes, then add walnuts and toss to coat. Transfer to a parchment-lined plate to cool.

3. When ready to serve the salad toss the greens with the pickling brine and olive oil and season to taste. Divide among serving dishes and garnish each salad with a crumble of cheese, an equal amount of shallot halves and candied walnuts. Enjoy.

CAMPS & RECREATION

Primitive Living Skills at Camp

This winter I built a full-scale wigwam at Camp DeWolfe in Wading River, where I live and work. As an Interpretive Naturalist, I teach about a wide range of nature-related topics. I specialize in the subsistence skills of our ancestors, and in Wilderness Survival. The wigwam was designed for use when school groups, scout troops and other retreat groups visit. It will be a centerpiece during summer camp when campers gather for nature study and crafts.

There is a great need for more concrete and direct learning among kids and adults alike, and a hunger for experiences of communion with nature. Today's children need to use their hands and their whole bodies more often, go outside more, and connect to humanity's roots. We feel it is deeply beneficial for people to touch the earth, by directly sitting on it and by gathering and using beautiful natural materials for crafts.

What better place to meet and craft things than a shelter hand-built of sapling trees tied together with strips of vines and thatched with reeds and grass? The wigwam is a dome, approximately eleven feet in diameter, situated on the bluff overlooking the Long Island Sound. The view from its doorway is spectacular and inspiring, and its interior cozy and personal. The circular shape invites guests to relax together, soaking up the warmth emanating from the stone-lined fire pit in the center of the floor. It is often the place where campers and staff can get to know each other better as people.

The children can use the space while making stone tools, building campfires without the use of matches and crafting fiber projects such as baskets, mats and rope. We have found that handmade crafts are popular with children from a variety of backgrounds and that they all appreciate the opportunity to make something cool and keep it for their very own. Stone tools are mankind's oldest known craft, dating back 2.5 million years or so. Most of our modern metal hand tools are patterned after tools made from stones, bones, and seashells. It is quite a kick to make a small chip of flint into a pointed drill bit, set it into a notched stick, bind it in place with animal sinew, and drill a hole in a stone pendant with it. You should see the fashion show, with proud kids showing off their primitively drilled, polished and engraved stone jewelry! To top it off, they can string them onto a cord they have handmade, preparing natural plant fibers and twisting them tightly.

There will be stories told around the fire, laughter, and real communication. We feel that this is a significant path to building real community, which can only help everyone it touches. The fire is also a place for cooking. Children are fascinated with the process of creating delicious foods without the use of any modern utensils. We fry cornmeal pancakes on a stone griddle propped up over the coals. Raisins, nuts and maple syrup make the batter better, and kids eat every pancake we make! They get to cook their own personal shish kebab, roasting cubes of turkey or beef to their liking. We discuss nutrition, the history of cooking and the origins of the foods we eat today. Kids need to know that food does not come into existence wrapped in plastic in the supermarket!

One primitive skill we teach involves children in construction of small temporary shelters that they can make in less than an hour. They require no tools other than hands, and utilize only sticks and leaves found in any woodland area. No living things are harmed. This shelter provides impressive insulation, good for temperatures below zero. The participants come away with a solid knowledge of the physics of insulation and body heat production. Since the most dangerous thing in the wilderness is hypothermia, or lowered body temperature, it is great that a fun educational activity can prepare people to save their own lives during an emergency. The feelings of self-sufficiency and confidence are invaluable under any life circumstances.

In my work, I am sometimes lucky enough to run into a student who attended a program of mine many years ago. Many of them clearly remember every detail of the experiences they had, and often tell me that it influenced the path they took in life.

CAMPS & RECREATION

Paard Hill Farms at a Glance

Located on Shelter Island, Paard Hill Farms (PHF) is a state-of-the-art boarding and lesson facility on 36 lush acres with a magnificent view of Gardiner's Bay. Our mission is to inspire joy, excellence, courage and confidence in a safe and friendly environment. Our location and our programs make us unique on Long Island.

At PHF we offer lessons in hunters, equitation and dressage. Our professional trainers work with novice and competitive level riders. Our lesson program is unique in that we start from the ground up. That is, we start on the ground, teaching the aspiring equestrian how to halter and safely lead a horse out of its stall. Beginners learn how to groom and tack up, thus encouraging a bond between horse and rider. We believe horsemanship is more than just riding; it's caring about all aspects of the horse and learning how to communicate with the horse in a language the horse understands.

Also unique is our Residential Program. We offer several 4-night, 5-day sessions throughout the year. The program is for girls age 9 and older. They stay in a large, beautiful Victorian home on the farm property. The house is home to our resident barn manager who also happens to be a registered nurse with over 30 years of nursing experience. Included in the program are riding lessons, clinics with our farrier, vet, equine massage therapist and chiropractor, and instruction in methods of natural horsemanship.

In addition, PHF has two summer programs. One is a day camp for boys and girls age 7 and up. The other is our Pony Preschool, for children age 4 and up who have never been on a horse or pony. This is a wonderful program that involves the parents leading the horses while the instructor teaches and encourages.

Our most unique, rewarding, and exciting program is our Scholarship Program. Through a partnership with Equus & Equestrian Sport Foundation, in the past 2 years we have raised and awarded nearly $40,000 in riding scholarships to students on Eastern Long Island. As the parent of one of our scholarship recipients wrote, "With utter joy I have observed my daughter's unshakeable dedication to hard work, commitment, and respect for her trainer and the horses - her best friends. Through her scholarship, she has participated in a world that has somehow offered a new freedom and a chance to be her true self, keeping the challenging behaviors and emotions of adolescence in check."

In October of 2005 PHF sponsored a horse show at our facility for Pal-O-Mine, a not-for-profit organization that teaches therapeutic riding to individuals with a variety of physical and emotional disabilities. This was such a deeply moving and inspiring event that we're sponsoring another Pal-O-Mine show on October 15, 2006.

Clinics are part of the program at PHF. We host natural horsemanship, dressage and jumping clinics throughout the year. We are currently planning a dressage clinic with Grand Prix rider Jon Brons, and a jumping clinic with nationally ranked Grand Prix rider Callan Solem.

Boarding your horse is another unique experience at PHF. Our goal is to enable you to feel secure in knowing your horse will be lovingly and responsibly cared for, even when you're not at the barn. All stalls are 12' x 12', with windows and automatic waterers. The barn is immaculate, bright and airy. A fly spray system, a huge heated/air conditioned tackroom, and wash stalls with hot water and heat lamps are some of the amenities you will find at PHF. The footing in our large indoor and outdoor arenas is dust-free. A grass jumping field, trails, and numerous grass paddocks complete the picture.

Leasing and selling quality horses and ponies in every price range is also a service we provide. Several lease options are available. In addition, PHF Co-Owner Pieter Ruig imports young KWPN Dutch Warmbloods. They are raised and trained by top East Coast trainers for eventual sale.

Summer Kingdom for a Horse at Rose Hill Farm

It is undeniable that there is a special bond that takes place between owner and pet. However, casual bystanders and observers of equestrian sport may not realize that there is an amazing bond between horse and rider as well.

As the sun rises at Rose Hill Farm and the horses' caretakers begin their day at work, a loud chorus of nickers and neighing erupts from the horses' stalls. If a person who was unfamiliar with horses was to observe this, he or she would likely be very shocked by all of the noise. However, the caretakers, known to equestrians as "grooms," know what the vocals mean. It means the horses are ready for their breakfast!

Shortly after the grooms appear at Rose Hill Farm, the horse trainers begin to arrive. Rose Hill Farm has four full-time horse trainers. When the trainers arrive, the horses have already been fed and are contentedly munching their hay. It is time for exercise. As the trainers walk into the stable, a softer "nicker" can be heard from the stalls. This welcoming sound says hello.

Horses will begin to recognize their owners, trainers and caretakers' voices. A horse will express interest and pleasure when they see one of their human companions. A trained equestrian can recognize the body language of a horse as a clear communication signal.

To a trained eye, the expression held by a horse's ears, the look in its eye and on its face, the noises it vocalizes and also the position and tension of its body, communicate clearly how it is feeling. A horse's owner, trainer and caretaker will understand a horse is happy, excited, distracted, angry, nervous, hungry, cranky, tired, energetic and etc..... Horses have distinct and individual personalities. A rider can learn a lot about a horse through his or her riding and exercise sessions. Some horses are very nervous and uptight; some are very laid back or even lazy. Some horses are naturally very smart and confident during training; some horses need help in building confidence during training or can be stubborn. A horse and rider will gain respect for each other and begin to build a trusting relationship as they work together.

At Rose Hill Farm, both the riders and the horses enjoy a unique atmosphere where personal attention helps build the bond. Rose Hill Farm is unique to the Hamptons because it is a smaller and more personalized family-oriented farm.

As the typical day continues at Rose Hill, students arrive for their riding lessons. The young riders anticipate hearing which pony they will be riding. They will then rush to greet their mount. As the students return weekly and as they grow in their skills, they begin to notice certain important signals that the horses and ponies are using to communicate with them. They will then learn how to communicate back. These skills become more refined, as can be seen in some of the horse owners at Rose Hill.

The horse and pony owners range from young riders, who bounce along on little ponies, to talented teenage equestrians, to avid adult riders. At each level, the relationship between horse and rider is strong and special. These riders will come to the farm daily, after school, on the weekends and whenever they can. They will learn what motivates their horses and how to tailor their riding to get the best results from their horses.

The day closes at Rose Hill and all of the horses have been exercised, groomed, fed and put away to settle in for the night. Equestrians of many different levels and many new riders have passed through the stable before the end of the day. Some of the rider and horse teams are now a step closer to competition. Others have strengthened their general skills. And most have found new appreciation for each other.

Rose Hill Farm is located at 2035 Scuttle Hole Road in Bridgehampton. For information call 631-537-1919.

CAMPS & RECREATION

Waterfront on the Cheap

There's summer camps and there's summer camping. For most of us, ocean and bay front homes are the stuff of dreams, but through camping you can find yourself spending the weekend on some of the most expensive real estate in the Hamptons.

At the west end of Southampton's prestigious, uber-exclusive Meadow Lane, on a peninsula where the Atlantic Ocean meets the Shinnecock Bay, Shinnecock East County Park offers 100 RV campsites (depending on beach erosion). Although tents are not permitted, for those with a 4-wheel drive Winnebago this may be one of the most spectacular ocean front campgrounds in the country. The campsites are actually on the beach, either on the ocean or bay side. At under a hundred dollars per night you can swim and fish on the same stretch of beach as Calvin Klein. The park is no more than ten minutes from Southampton Village, making it ideal for anyone looking to hit the shops or to grab a bite to eat. Campers can stay for a maximum of six nights. For information please contact (631) 852-8899.

If you're looking to rough it in the wilderness, Sears Bellows County Park in Hampton Bays may be just what you have been searching for. The campgrounds offer both tent and trailer camping. There are restrooms and showers, but no electricity at the tent sites. Sears Bellows Park offers a wide-ranging network of trails for hiking and horseback riding. Riders can either bring their own horses (with a riding permit) or take a trail ride from the stables. There are also swimming and rowboat rentals available on Bellows Pond. If you choose to go freshwater fishing a permit is required. Sears Bellows is located on Bellows Pond Road, in Hampton Bays, and is most easily found by locating the Big Duck on Route 24. For more information please contact the park office at (631) 852-8290.

Also in Hampton Bays is Meschutt Beach County Park on the east side of the Shinnecock canal, off exit 66 on Sunrise Highway. Although it does not offer ocean front camping it does allow for a small amount of camping and trailers and has a supervised bathing beach on the Peconic Bay as well as a food concession, bathrooms and showers.

In Westhampton, at Cupsogue Beach County Park, RVs are permitted along the access road of this 296-acre barrier beach. The area is known for saltwater bass fishing and of course ocean swimming at its lifeguarded beach. There are bathrooms, showers, a concession stand, and a first aid center. It is located on Dune Road in Westhampton, just across Jessup Lane Bridge.

Camping, golfing, hiking, kayaking, fishing, and a playground for children are just some of the amenities at Indian Island County Park in Riverhead. Just north of Route 105, the 275-acre Indian Island sits at the mouth of the Peconic River and opens up into Flanders Bay. The park is situated right next to Indian Island Golf Course, which is a beautiful waterfront 18-hole course open to the public. The area known as the "island" at Indian Island, a former island now connected by a sand causeway, offers picnicking facilities, grills, tables, and benches overlooking the bay. For camping reservations please contact (631) 244-7275.

Heading east, Cedar Point County Park offers the best of everything. Tucked back in the Northwest Woods, this 607-acre park is accessible by land and sea. The views of Gardiner's Bay are stunning and hiking trails include a beach walk out to the Cedar Point Lighthouse, which was built in 1860. Fishing and boating are great draws for this park. In addition to outdoor activities like biking, scuba diving, and picnicking, the General Store and Snack Bar offer Saturday night movies on the lawn. Call (631) 244-7275 for reservations and directions.

Montauk offers two fantastic camping areas. Nestled between Old Montauk Highway and the Atlantic Ocean is Hither Hills State Park. The park offers great outdoor sport opportunities like volleyball, basketball and softball, and also includes hiking and biking trails plus a bridal path. Their facilities are also vast and include a laundry room, showers, a grilling area, and a general store. It is a highly sought after recreational area and the 165 spots go rather fast so book soon. Dogs allowed. Call (631) 668-2554 for reservations and a full list of everything offered.

Also in Montauk is Theodore Roosevelt County Park. The park is enormous at 1185 acres and has a little of everything including horseback riding, fishing, canoeing & kayaking, and three and a half miles of nature trails, as well as beach access. It is located on East Lake Drive, Montauk.

There's nothing like getting back to nature; spending a night in the woods, or camping under the stars with the lapping waves of the ocean resonating in your ears. For those who take to their RVs, strap on their rucksacks or are just looking for something different this summer, camping the South Fork is more accessible than you may have thought.

Dan's HOME

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Dealing with Age

We live in a culture obsessed with youthfulness! Every year, billions are spent face-lifting gardens – ripping out and discarding the old and replenishing with the new.

Aging gardens, like aging people, often do not show their potential because of neglect. Yet, gardens and people possess the potential for a sense of serenity that cannot be duplicated by youth and deserve special care and consideration.

As I am discovering, in age, more maintenance is necessary and gardens require strategic editing to keep the pieces graceful and majestic. I spent last weekend, for example, pruning three yews that have become bare and overgrown with age!

With the years, trees and shrubs get larger, take up space, and give more shade. Some plants decline, others take over. A gardener's design interests also change over time, as do the selection and availability of new hybrid plants. All of these factors have an effect on the garden. Some plants may need to be re-located or divided; and others may need to be removed as maintenance requirements grow and preferences change.

Whether a garden is overflowing with shrubs and trees, or has the inevitable aging bald spots, it needs to be re-evaluated, just as we re-evaluate ourselves from time to time. Gardens are not static, and they need their "coat of paint" every two or three years. Tree trunks bulge, knock down fences and raise concrete walkways; roses grow leggy and intrusive and get diseased, and shrubs overtake walkways. In addition, what is taking place in the neighbor's yard can also influence garden requirements.

As a rule of thumb, trim trees every four or five years. If the garden has been designed for sustainability, plants can be allowed to mature to their intended shape and size. This means they need to be enabled to attain maximum growth. This requires a "trim, wait, trim, wait" approach to pruning that can take years. The approach should be to make trees look crisper and more appealing – and, where appropriate, to increase the penetration of light. When pruning, think about what a tree will look like in the next year instead of right now!

Shrubs may have a life of up to 30 years when properly cared for. Most shrubs, including azaleas and rhododendrons, require pruning after they have been in the garden for about three or four years. Prune flowering shrubs just after they bloom; others in winter or early spring. When pruning, try to retain a natural look by cutting the stalks at various lengths. This helps to retain a natural outer edge that is appealing in informal gardens. Sheared shrubs look older – just as "pinched" people do. If you are willing to provide a year or two for recovery, shrubs such as yews, boxwoods, and some deciduous varieties respond well to heavy pruning in early spring.

Perennials, depending on type and habit, require maintenance by dividing and separating every two to three years. Larger perennial clumps tend to produce fewer flowers. Dividing them promotes fresh growth and greater garden color and also provides the opportunity to lift roots, turn and loosen soil, and to add fertilizers to keep perennials at optimum performance. It also provides a chance to redesign beds (which I like to do every two or three years).

Shade gardens are especially vulnerable to the effects of age. In shady locations, soil benefits from refreshing at least every five years (best done in early spring as soon as soil can be worked). A tell-tale sign in shady garden that the soil needs refreshing is the build up of moss – which seems to grow in compacted soils. Mixing in sand and peat helps to loosen soil and prevent moss buildup.

Of course, having an aging garden matures the gardener as well. There is the continual challenge to create balance between a satisfying effect, sustainability, coherence, and consistency. This requires a willingness to modify placements and to be bold enough to make tough plant decisions. In fact, as plants mature a gardener's thoughts about how a garden comes together change – just as people's thoughts about themselves change over time.

Late March and early April, despite the lingering cold, are excellent times to assess the garden. A stroll among flower beds and around foundation plants will give clues about a garden's needs. Now is a great time to rejuvenate the garden and the gardener's spirits in anticipation of a glorious spring. Who knows, it may rejuvenate the gardener in the process!

Golden Oldies

With my Mum's 60th birthday (gasp) only weeks away, I've been forced to take stock and think about how, as we all age, sometimes (and certainly in my Mum's case), though we change and don't have that first bloom of youth, we can also evolve and even get better with age.

Mum doesn't dye her hair. It's chestnut brown and shiny, though at the last count she does have six strands of gray (you need a magnifying glass to see them), and so she's decided to wait until she hits 60 before she hits the bottle.....the coloring bottle that is. But what bottle should she choose? Is there something worthy of 60-year-old hair?

How about a product that has aged just as well as Mum has, or even better?

L'Oreal has been around for nearly 100 years and is still going strong as one of the leading hair coloring products on the market. Like my Mum, they have evolved, changed and diversified its assets and image and so, with nearly a century of experience, they just might be the product line worthy enough for 60 years of virgin hair.

It's hard to believe that L'Oreal, a company that seems so new and fresh, has been around longer than any of us. With this in mind, I decided to recognize some other long-lived products and beauty lines; golden oldies that we take for granted, but are worth an auspicious mention.

Wrangler jeans is nearly as old as my Mum, established in 1947 and has continued to reign strong by evolving and changing. Wrangler now has many subsidiary companies like Riggs Workwear, Pro Gear, Timber Creek, and a line of khaki pants. Impressive that a company can grow and maintain its presence for nearly 60 years, right? That is until you take look at Levi Strauss, the first and original jean. At 133-years-old, Levis is still as strong a brand as ever – even of late becoming an A list fashion item, as apposed to just a great old standard. Celebrities are once again giving Levi their "IT List" stamp of approval. And you know we'll all follow the trend.

I'm only hoping that my Mum lasts and looks as good as they do.

Keds first hit stores in 1916 and were the folks who came up with the word sneaker.....Its advertising agency coined the phrase for Keds because their rubber soles were very quiet and allowed you to "sneak" around. 90 years ago the brand was extremely popular and worn initially by famous athletes. But watch out, because, although Keds have been a presence in the market for those 90 years, they've recently made a huge comeback and are front and center as one of the hottest trends again, somewhat because of their current advertising campaign spearheaded by Mischa Barton.

Ray Bans, born in 1937, became the "IT" glasses in the 50s. Then they had a major comeback in the 80s. Who can forget Tom Cruise and those Aviators? But nearly 70 years later, Ray Bans are just as popular as ever, with yet more celebrity con-doned publicity. Seen on Drew Barrymore, Lucy Liu and Cameron Diaz in Charlie's Angels, and Ben Affleck in Daredevil, Ray Bans are just as hot as ever.

Crest toothpaste. Ever wonder who came up with that thing all toothpastes base their credibility on.....flouride? Wonder no more, Crest, used by 150 million Americans, was the first to develop the use of fluoride. But this 51-year-old company, like all our golden oldies, evolved and expanded their dental care range and in 2000 launched another first, home whitening strips. Crest says that, "a white and healthy smile is the best fashion accessory there is".....They just might have a point. Wisdom comes with age so at 51, Crest is headed in the right direction.

Suave, like Ray Bans, was also developed in 1937. Initially designed as a hair tonic, it evolved into a shampoo in the 50s. Now, though there are so many shampoos out there, from the high-end ones that people simply must have for those perfect silky locks we all lust for, to the less expensive brands like Suave, Suave is far from being all washed up, no matter how fierce the competition. Still going strong nearly 60 years later, they produce 18 bottles of shampoo a second. Not bad for a golden oldie.

So, if you think that something (or someone) might be a tad past its expiration date – think again. They can always reinvent, rejuvenate and have a spectacular come back when you least expect it.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

In New York, real estate and development mogul Harry Macklowe has just purchased a Manhattan mansion on the Upper East Side for $15.7 million. The mega developer is not only in the process of taking over this huge city dwelling but has recently gone to contract on the Drake Hotel on 56th Street and already has a development project of condos and business space in progress that consists of approximately one full city block on 53rd. The one time neighbor to Martha Stewart, on East Hampton's beautiful Georgica Pond, has been busy gobbling up chunks of New York's Upper East Side for some time now. Rumor has it that the mansion may be simply an investment to flip as opposed to becoming one of the Macklowe's New York residences. The property is zoned commercial as well as residential so it is not yet determined how it will be used. Mr. Macklowe's and Ms. Stewart's disagreements over property lines made local news in the late 90s.

Comparatively speaking, city properties such as the one recently purchased by Mr. Macklowe are the only properties that relatively compare to our Hamptons' waterfronts when it comes to pricing, value and amenity. Obviously, there are other properties that reach the same price point in various parts of the country but few could match the features that these locales offer, which is where the value lies. A 3000 sq ft town home overlooking New York's Central Park could only be compared with a 3000 sq ft beach house on Further Lane. Either way, it's a relatively fair trade.

In other parts of the East End, there are valuable commercial listings coming on to the new spring market. As a matter of fact, this year has seen many commercial sites go up for sale. Numerous motels in Montauk have been placed on the market, retail stores in East Hampton and two Marinas, one in East Hampton and one on Shelter Island. On Shelter Island, The Island Boatyard is now for sale. Shelter Island is virtually a sailor's paradise and sailors from all over the eastern seaboard frequent the pristine island each summer. This 3.2-acre marina has 80 boat slips that can accommodate vessels to 50 ft. and includes three boat repair and storage facilities. It includes a 3200 sq ft catering facility with an outdoor bar as well as a 600 sq ft game room. The property also includes a breakfast café, outdoor pool and dock house. There are exquisite bay and harbor views. The Marina is priced at $12 million and is listed with Brown Harris Stevens in East Hampton.

In East Hampton another commercial site and another Marina, East Hampton Point, is also new to the market in Three Mile Harbor. This one has 58 boat slips, a very private pool area and tennis courts. This resort and marina include 13 shingle-style guest cot- tages and 7 luxury suites with stunning sunset views of the harbor. There is a restaurant with 400 feet of open waterfront dining. It is a full service marina set on five acres of prime real estate. It is listed with Town & Country Real Estate in East Hampton at $55 million.

In Montauk at $12.5 million you can buy the farm, the horse farm, that is. This hilltop ranch and compound has 360 degree views of the surrounding preserve, ocean and wetlands. The 10-acre property adjoins another 6 acres of The Big Sky preserve that is filled with riding, biking and hiking trails. Montauk offers some of Long Island's most beautiful and pristine riding and nature trails. The main house has five bedrooms and the main barn is 5100 sq ft. In addition, there is a 6000 sq ft riding arena and a storage barn. The property is listed with Prudential Douglas Elliman in Amagansett for $11.2 million.

STATISTICS TELL A STORY

Dear Dan,

I found the article No Crime (February 17) to be of great significance. I would like to add a few details to the topic. In 1992, there were 2,154 murders in New York City and 626,182 serious crimes. We had reached a peak in overall crime, then something happened, the crime rate began to turn, and it tipped. Within five years, murders had dropped 64.3% and total crimes had dropped by almost 50%. NYPD will tell you that what happened was that the city's policing strategies dramatically improved. Criminologists will point to the decline of the crack trade and the aging population. Economists will say that it was due to the gradual improvement in the city's economy. The changes in the drug trade, the population and the economy are all long-term trends, happening all over the country. These factors don't fully explain why crime plunged in New York City so much more than in other cities in the country, and they don't fully explain why it happened in such an extraordinarily short time in New York City.

In order to gain greater insight into why change happens the way it does, one needs to be aware of three characteristics:

- Contiguosness of ideas, actions, emotions, etc.
- The fact that little causes can have big effects.
- Change happens not gradually but in one dramatic moment. The term given to that one dramatic moment when everything can change all at once is called the tipping point.

To appreciate this concept, we need to prepare ourselves for the possibility that big changes follow small events and that these changes can happen very quickly. The unexpected becomes the expected, radical change is more than a possibility, contrary to our expectations, is a certainty.

You end your article with the thought that happiness can lead to complacency and wondering if our political systems are safe and if there is anyone out there manning the wheel when all is put to the test. I would like to close with these words: It is obvious to many that our political system is doing its part in establishing peace the lower crime rate countrywide is proof. It is also obvious that the everyday person is contributing to the wave of, as you put it, peace, happiness, joy and serenity that is growing throughout the land. The collective day to day, seemingly small actions and words are powerful tools that we all can use to create tremendous change. While our elected officials have their job to do we need to remember that each and every one of us shares the responsibility of maintaining a peaceful society in our daily lives. We can see through statistics that our society is evolving into a more peaceful state. Imagine the ripple effect it is having worldwide.

Your article gently reminds people not to be complacent and that changes have begun. It is refreshing to see responsible journalism that brings hope to many as we navigate throughout these changing times.

Allstate's Actions Shed Light on Catastrophe Preparedness

Dear Dan,

Allstate is a responsible and trustworthy company that's taking difficult but measured actions to manage its high concentration of risk. These actions are being taken for the benefit of the majority of the company's customers.

Insurers statewide testified during a recent insurance dept hearing they have the capacity to meet the area's needs. This means a healthy, competitive industry environment - good news.

However, those of us in the coastal, densely populated areas of NY must face that we will be struck by a natural catastrophe. Seven of the nation's 10 worst hurricanes have occurred in the last 15 months. Yet, we manage catastrophes by looking through the rear-view mirror, preparing for them after they've happened. We must look through the windshield.

National Oceanic & Atmospheric Administration says the frequency of a category one storm in our area is every 17 years, a category two storm every 39 years, a category three storm (same as Hurricane Katrina) every 68 years. In 1938, the storm known as the Long Island Express left 63,000 people homeless, created what we now know as the Shinnecock Inlet, and cost more than 300 million in 1938 dollars. Today, that storm would cost tens of billions of dollars.

As we give a warm welcome to spring (and the coming hurricane season), our leaders are to be commended for joining together and encouraging dialogue on this issue. It seems we all agree that the worst thing we can do, as a state and as a country, is nothing.

Brian Pozzi
Regional Counsel, New York Region

THE SYSTEM

Dear Dan,

With reference to the Police Blotter section of your paper, it is my opinion that instead of making light of "minor" crime, you tell it like it is - crime and disrespect for the rest of us. Please clean up your act and report the facts as they are. They are criminals and scum.

Edward T. Mooney
Moriches, NY

Except they are innocent until proven guilty. -DR

Police Blotter

Bad Badminton

A 16-year-old struck another student in the head while playing a game of badminton. The student reported to police that he was walking over to pick up the birdie when he was whacked in the head with a racket. No charges were filed. When questioned by police, the racket smacker said in his defense, "I thought his head was the birdie." Police are having an optometrist examine the eyes of the young man.

* * *

Bad Credit

A woman in Southampton reported to police that somebody stole her credit card and charged $2,000 on it at a high-end clothing store in Hampton Bays. The woman had bought a shirt there and then mistakenly left the card at the counter. Police have started rounding up women dressed in expensive clothing for questioning; however, the process is long. One investigator said, "There are just so many women out here that are dressed absolutely fabulously."

* * *

Tom Cruise?

A man in Hampton Bays was arrested after being pulled over and giving the officer that pulled him over a fake driver's license. The officer became suspicious when he read that the name on the license said Tom Cruise. "I've seen Top Gun a million times, that guy is definitely not Tom Cruise," said the officer.

* * *

Not Funny

A man in Sag Harbor reported to police that somebody poured glue in the driver and passenger side door locks as well as the rear door lock of his van. The victim reported it to police after he was unable to get inside the van. "It's a sticky situation," a witness said.

* * *

Cell Phone Caper

A man in Quogue reported to police that somebody stole his cell phone that was valued to be $250. The Quogue man called the number of the cell phone and left a message asking the thief to give the phone back. The thief called the man back and left a voice mail saying he would give it back when he was finished using it. The man then text messaged the thief that if he didn't give it back then he would be sorry. The thief then called the man back, but the reception wasn't any good, it was reported to police that the thief said, "Can you hear me now?" After several call backs, which resulted in several disconnections, the Quogue man no longer wants his cell phone returned.

* * *

Speeding

A man in North Haven was pulled over speeding. The officer found out his driver's license had been suspended after running it through his computer. Ironically, the man's license had been suspended for, you guessed it, speeding.

On The Look Out

A man in Sag Harbor reported to police that somebody struck him in the eye and then damaged his car while he was eating at a restaurant. The man said to police that he did not know where the man went or who he was, but that he remembered what he looked like. He said that he would, "Keep his eye out," for him.

* * *

Petit

A woman in Westhampton was arrested for petit larceny and was brought to police headquarters for questioning. She was caught stealing from the petit section of a clothing store.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.
